

UNIVERSITY OF ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE

3 1761 01865274 3

THE UTOPIA
OF
SIR THOMAS MORE

London

HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE
AMEN CORNER, E.C.

New York

MACMILLAN & CO., 66 FIFTH AVENUE

THE UTOPIA
OF
SIR THOMAS MORE

IN LATIN FROM THE EDITION OF MARCH 1518, AND IN ENGLISH FROM THE FIRST EDITION OF RALPH ROBYNSON'S TRANSLATION IN 1551

WITH ADDITIONAL TRANSLATIONS, INTRODUCTION AND NOTES

BY
J. H. LUPTON, B.D.

SURMASTER OF ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, AND PREACHER OF GRAY'S INN
FORMERLY FELLOW OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

WITH FACSIMILES

Oxford
AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

M.DCCC.XCV

1895

FEB 25 1953

Oxford

PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

BY HORACE HART, PRINTER TO THE UNIVERSITY

TO FREDERIC SEEBOHM
AUTHOR OF 'THE OXFORD REFORMERS' AND TO
FREDERICK W. WALKER, M.A.
HIGH MASTER OF ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL
THIS EDITION OF THE 'UTOPIA' IS DEDICATED WITH GRATITUDE AND ESTEEM

P R E F A C E

AN attempt has been made, in this edition of Sir Thomas More's work, to treat it with something of the same exact care that is looked for, as a matter of course, in editing a classical author. The text has been revised, the variations made in it by the author himself noted, and the readings of different editions compared. The allusions to persons and events, real or imaginary, have also, as far as possible, been traced out.

How much remained, and I fear still remains, to be done in this respect, a single example will show. More's narrator, Hythloday, is made to speak in one place of having with him on board ship a companion, whom he calls Tricius Apinatus. No commentator hitherto, so far as I am aware, has taken the trouble to ascertain what the author meant by this name, or to recall the

'Sunt apinae tricaeque et si quid vilius istis'

of Martial. In endeavouring to discover the origin of other names of More's invention I may very probably have gone too far; but it seemed proper at any rate to make the attempt.

I have endeavoured to illustrate the bearing of the Utopia on some of the great questions of the day, by studying the circumstances amidst which it was composed. It is now the fashion, in some quarters, to try to detach More as far as possible from the great movement known as the Humanist. And certainly, if the only accredited representatives of that movement were such men as Poggio and Filelfo, or even as Politian and Valla, More could have had but small sympathy with it. But that great tide of reawakening thought and energy flowed in many channels. Many others besides those mentioned drank of its streams, and found them not Circean. And if it is fair to cite More's later writings to prove that he never could have really held some of the opinions which he seems to advocate in the Utopia, it is at least as fair to lay stress on the time and circumstances of its origin. It was written—the greater part of it, at least—at Antwerp, a city than which no other in the Netherlands, according to Ullmann, was more deeply imbued with the spirit of the Reformation. If it was not a true child of the Renaissance, it was ushered into the world with all the credentials of such a birth. It had commendatory verses hung about it by Cornelius Schreiber of Alst, who five years later was in prison at Brussels for heresy; and by Gerhard Geldenhaur of Nimeguen, who had already published what More calls biting satires upon the religious orders, and who, after being himself a monk, embraced the reformed faith, and died a married layman. On its second appearance, the Utopia was prefaced by a long letter from Budé, the restorer of Greek learning in France; who, as such, was suspected by many of a leaning to heretical opinions; and who had at any rate inserted, in a work preceding More's by a year or two, a very bitter, and not very generous, invective on the lately deceased Pontiff, Julius II.

That this setting, so to call it, of the Utopia may be brought into due prominence, I have translated the letter of Budé, as well as some other pieces not included by Robynson. There is no need to specify which these are. The style of the older translator speaks for itself. Whatever is not his, is mine.

The reader will find in the present edition everything comprised in the original one of 1516, excepting the letter and verses of Joannes Paludanus. These were deliberately omitted from the second edition, probably as having no intrinsic merit, and so are properly omitted here. Nothing is here left out which was in the second edition of the Latin, or in the first edition of the English translation. The reason for adopting different editions of the Latin and English is simply this. In the Latin, the later one was more complete and accurate than its predecessor, and evidently more what the author designed to make it. His wish is entitled to respect. On the other hand, our interest in Robynson's translation is chiefly due to its representing an early period of English; and for this purpose the earlier edition is the better. Moreover, while the second edition of Robynson has been often reprinted, the first has never been so, and it thus has the advantage of freshness. It will be seen from the various readings, which are all carefully noted, that, except in matters of spelling, the differences between the two are not really important.

In obtaining texts suitable to print from not a little difficulty was experienced. It was not thought advisable to reproduce the contractions, with which the old typography abounds. And so, after losing some time in trying expedients, I wrote out the whole of the Latin, from a copy of the edition of March, 1518, kindly lent me by Mr. Seebohm. A transcript of the first edition of Robynson's translation was also made for me, by the obliging permission of Dr. Sinker, from a copy in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge. In making both these transcripts, the only alteration permitted has been expanding the contractions, and occasionally readjusting the division of sentences.

No student of the period of English history in which More lived can fail to own his obligations to the Calendars of Letters and Papers of Henry the Eighth's reign made by the late Professor Brewer, and to the valuable Introductions prefixed to them. For my special subject I have, besides these, found great assistance in Dr. Lumby's excellent edition of the Utopia, and in the bibliographical Introduction to Professor Arber's reprint. Both of these, however, deal only with the English translation. To Mr. Seebohm's Oxford Reformers I am much indebted, not now for the first time. The edition I have used of it is the second. I have also derived much benefit from Father Bridgett's recently published Life and Writings of Sir Thomas More. It is the work of one well acquainted with his subject, and is pervaded by a candid spirit. I could wish that the chapter on the Utopia had been fuller.

For the loan of scarce books my thanks are due in several quarters. The use of a copy of the rare folio edition of More's English Works has been allowed me by the kindness of the Master of the Library of Gray's Inn, John Archibald Russell, Esq., Q.C. For the like use of a copy of Robynson's second edition, and of the Paris edition of 1517, I am indebted to the kindness of Professor John E. B. Mayor, and the Librarian of my own College, Mr. J. Bass Mullinger. Through the courtesy of the late Dr. Sieber and his assistants, I had the privilege, in the autumn of 1891, of inspecting some early copies of the Utopia in the University Library at Basle; among them being one that had belonged to Froben's old masters in his craft, the Amerbachs, bearing their autographs and a few annotations. I have to thank Bodley's Librarian for allowing the three facsimiles given in this volume to be made from a copy of the edition of March, 1518, in his charge. To Dr. F. J. Furnivall, who has contributed to our knowledge of More's time by his editions of its ballad literature; to Mr. R. W. Douthwaite, the Librarian of Gray's Inn; and lastly to my son, Mr. J. M. Lupton, assistant master in Marlborough College, my acknowledgements are due for kind help in various ways, which has greatly lightened my task.

J. H. L.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL:
Easter, 1895.

CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION.

	PAGE
§ 1. Early life of the Author	xvii
§ 2. Circumstances that gave rise to the UTOPIA	xxix
§ 3. Framework of the Story	xxxvii
§ 4. Comparison of the UTOPIA with other ideal Commonwealths	xliii
§ 5. Early Editions of the UTOPIA	lxiv
§ 6. Ralph Robynson, and the English Translations	lxxi

PRELIMINARY MATTER FROM THE ORIGINAL.

Title-page of the Edition of March, 1518	Facing lxxvi
Letter of Erasmus to the printer, Froben	lxxvii
Letter of Budé to Lupset	lxxx
A shorte Meter of Utopia, written by Anemolius poete laureate	xciii
A Meter of .iiii. verses in the Utopian tongue	xciv
The Utopian Alphabet	Facing xciv
Letter of Peter Giles to Hierome Buslyde	xcv
Letter of Thomas More to Peter Giles	I
Woodcut of Utopia	Facing 115

PRELIMINARY MATTER FROM ROBYNSON'S TRANSLATION.

Title-page of the first Edition of the Translation, 1551	13
Robynson's Epistle to Maister William Cecylle	15

THE UTOPIA.

	PAGE
THE FYRSTE BOKE	21
THE SECOND BOKE
CHAPTER I. Introductory	115
„ II. Of the Cyties and namely of Amaurote	126
„ III. Of the Magystrates	135
„ IV. Of Scyences, Craftes and Occupatyons	139
„ V. Of their Lyuing and mutuall Conuersation together	153
„ VI. Of their Iorneyng or trauaylynge a brode, wyth dyuers other matters cunninggly reasoned & wittilie discussed	167
„ VII. Of Bondemen, Sicke Persons, Wedlocke, and diuers other Matters	221
„ VIII. Of Warfare	243
„ IX. Of the Religyons of Utopia	266
APPENDIX FROM THE ORIGINAL.
Letter of Hierome Buslyde to Thomas More	313
Gerarde Nouiomage of Utopia	320
Cornelius Graphey to the Reader	322
GLOSSARY	323
INDEX.	337

INTRODUCTION

ERRATA

P. lxxii, n. 2, after Vol. ii. insert of the Kennet Collection,

P. lxxv, line 6, for 1887 read 1878

INTRODUCTION.

§ I.—EARLY LIFE OF THE AUTHOR.

THE latter part of the life of Sir Thomas More is so closely interwoven with the general history of his country, that it need not be re-told here. But the reader may be better able to appreciate the ensuing work, if he has presented to him a brief outline of the earlier portion, especially in so far as it bears on the production of the Utopia.

Thomas More was the second child, and eldest son, of John More, gentleman, afterwards a judge in the Court of King's Bench, and Agnes, daughter of Thomas Graunger. He was born, February 7, 1478, in Milk Street, in the City of London, 'the brightest star,' as Fuller has it, 'that ever shined in that Via Lactea.'

His family, 'non celebris, sed honesta,' was well descended. His father, and also his grandfather before him, appear to have filled successively the offices, then accounted honourable, of butler and steward at Lincoln's Inn, and thence to have become, as students, members of the society¹. Judge More received the coif, and in consequence left the Inn, in 1503; was made one of the Judges of Common Pleas in 1518; was thence transferred to the King's Bench in 1520; and died in 1530.

More's connexion with Lincoln's Inn, of which he himself afterwards became a member, and, not being made a Serjeant,

¹ See a paper by Mr. E. W. Bra- the *London and Middlesex Archaeo-
brook*, printed in the Transactions of logical Society (1875), iv. pp. 434-5.

never left, was thus hereditary. And the circumstance helps to account for the attachment which he always manifested for his Inn. Coming down to 'Lincoln's Inn diet, where many right-worshipful and of good years do live full well,' was the first step of the descent in his broken fortunes that he playfully discussed with his family in later years. And the arrangements for dining at the public tables, in the communal life of the Utopians, would seem to have been suggested by the dining in Hall of the Benchers and other members of his Inn¹.

The school to which young More was sent is said to have been St. Anthony's, attached to the hospital of that name in Threadneedle Street. The foundation was due originally to Henry III, but had been increased and endowed by Henry VI and Edward IV; and, just about the time when More would enter, had been annexed to the Collegiate Church of St. George at Windsor, which proved the beginning of its dissolution². Colet is said to have been at the same school; but, if so, he would have left before More's entry, being twelve years older. The master was Nicholas Holt, a scholar of some eminence³. Here More laid the foundation of a knowledge of Latin, which was both copious and accurate. St. Anthony's school was, by its constitution, designed to be a feeder of Eton College, its scholars having exhibitions provided to take them afterwards to Oxford. Whether More was ever at Eton does not appear. Probably he was not, as his school-days were shortened by his entrance into the household of Cardinal Morton. Here he would have the advantage of being trained in a school of manners under one of the leading men of his time. And, like Bentley long afterwards at the table of Bishop Stillingfleet, he seems to have impressed his patron with a conviction of his own future greatness. 'This child here waiting at the table,' Morton is reported to have said, 'whoever shall live to see it, will prove a marvellous man!'¹ More's own opinion of the Cardinal, in the language of affectionate recollection, is put into the mouth of his speaker, Hythloday².

¹ See below, p. 164. A statue of More was erected in 1889 by George Arnold, Esq., at the corner of Carey Street, Lincoln's Inn. Father Bridgett speaks of this as being the first statue of him erected in London. But there is one outside the new building of the City of London School, on the Victoria Embankment, which had been placed there some years before.

² Stow's Survey, ed. 1720, i. p. 120.

³ According to Johnson, in his Life of Linacre, 1835, p. 20 n., this Holt was himself the author of an Accidence, but he is not to be confounded with the John Holt, author of the Lac Puerorum, for whom see Bloxam's Register . . . of Magdalen College, iii. p. 15.

Morton united again the broken thread of More's education by sending him to Oxford. We are, unfortunately, unable to ascertain at what college he entered, or whether he remained long enough to take any degree. His father seems to have looked with a jealous eye on the attractions of literature as a rival of the law, and to have given him but a stinted allowance³. But More secured the great object of his residence at the University. He perfected his acquaintance with the Latin tongue, practising the art of composition in it, as Erasmus tells us, in every form; and, above all, entering on the then new and enthralling study of Greek. For this, he had the great advantage of Grocyn's instruction, as well as that of Grocyn's younger friend Linacre⁴. According to his own testimony, he attended Linacre's lectures on a work of Aristotle's in Greek⁵. Could it have been the Politics? More

¹ Life by Roper, ed. 1822, p. 4.

² Inf. pp. 41-43. Lord Campbell's opinion of Morton is not so favourable. It is on a judgement of his as Lord Chancellor, that he makes the caustic remark: 'Equity decisions, at this time, depended upon each Chancellor's peculiar notions of the law of God, and the manner in which Heaven would visit the defendant for the acts complained of in the bill.'—Lives of the Lord Chancellors, 1845, i. p. 425.

³ See the passage from Stapleton, quoted by Seebohm, p. 26 n. For the hardness of the life at Oxford, at this period, and the general poverty of students, see Boase's Register of the University of Oxford, 1885, Pref. p. xii., and the same writer's Register . . . of Exeter College, 1879, p. x. There is, unfortunately, a gap in the University was undoubtedly familiar with the Republic of Plato. His knowledge of Greek enabled him to bear Lily equal company in translating epigrams from the Anthologia; and the fictitious names in the Utopia are almost all, as it will be observed, of Greek formation. But, in fact, his proficiency in Greek became an influence that modified all his future life, making him at one with Erasmus, and Lily, and Colet, and other like-minded men of the New Learning.

Register between 1463 and 1505.

⁴ 'Recens tunc [c. 1492] ex Italia venerat Grocinus, qui primus ea aetate Graecas literas in Angliam invexerat, Oxonique publice professus fuerat; a cujus sodali Tho. Linacro [Morus] Graecas literas Oxonii didicit.'—Stapleton: Tres Thomae (Thomae Mori Vita, c. 1).

⁵ In his letter to Dorpius, 1515, More refers to his attendance on these lectures, and adds that a translation of Aristotle might soon be expected from Linacre's pen, which had only been delayed by the claims of Galen.—See Th. Mori Lucubrationes, 1563, pp. 416-7. It is worth noticing that the first lecture delivered in the newly opened University of Alcalá was upon Aristotle. Prescott: Ferdinand and Isabella, ed. 1886, p. 660.

We must hasten quickly over the period of More's stay at New Inn—an Inn of Chancery, affiliated to Lincoln's Inn—which he entered after leaving Oxford. In the 'mootings' there, to which he alludes long afterwards in his controversy with Tindal, his vigorous intellect would be still further whetted and strengthened. On February 12, 1496, being then just eighteen, he was admitted a student of Lincoln's Inn. His life there would naturally be uneventful, and we do not know even the date of his call to the Bar. But it is worth while to pause a moment, and recall the stirring scenes which were then being exhibited in the great drama of the outer world.

Just four years before More went into residence at Lincoln's Inn, the last Caliph of the Moors in Spain had signed a capitulation, by which the banner of Castile waved over the highest tower of the Alhambra. The same year that saw the expulsion of the Moors from Granada, witnessed the discovery of the new world by Columbus. The bounds of Christendom were being enlarged. Commerce felt her fetters loosed, and the Intercursus magnus of 1496 was but one sign of the reviving energies of peace. In 1497 John Cabot sailed from Bristol and discovered Newfoundland.

With what eager interest the mind of the young law-student would follow these events, it needs no stretch of imagination to conceive. His perusal of the narratives of Vespucci is in itself sufficient evidence. But we may possibly find, in the excitement of those eventful years, an explanation of one proceeding on More's part which has generally been thought singular. That is, his delivering a course of lectures on Augustine's De Civitate Dei, in the church of St. Lawrence, Jewry. The subject and the place alike (though his old tutor, Grocyn, was rector of the parish) have seemed unusual for a young student of an Inn of Court to choose. If we connect it with More's former studies at Oxford, and with the tidings ever pouring in of discoveries in a new world, we may perhaps discern more reasons for the choice. The subject of an ideal commonwealth was doubtless working in More's mind years before the Utopia took form.

After his call to the Bar, More was made 'reader' at Furnivall's Inn for three years or longer; and it must have been about this time that he passed through a period of suspense and inward struggle, as to his ultimate choice of a profession. His success in legal studies, no less than his father's strong wish, might seem to have already decided this for him. But it is no uncommon experience for a season of doubt and unsettlement to ensue, when the excitement is over of working for a high degree at the University, or surmounting the first barriers of a learned profession. At any rate, More was now strongly drawn to the priesthood, and for 'about four years,' Roper tells us, lived as a sort of unprofessed brother of the London Charterhouse. He had thoughts of being ordained, Stapleton tells us, along with his friend Lily¹. What diverted both the friends from this course, we can only conjecture. Colet, we are expressly told, advised More to marry. His own feelings, Erasmus tells us, prompted him to that as the wiser and safer, though not the ideally loftier, course. And so in 1505 he married Jane Colt, of Newhall, in Essex. Lily also married, probably before his friend².

More's home was now in Bucklersbury, where for a time he passed what must have been a happy and prosperous life. Children were born to him in rapid succession: his beloved Margaret at the end of 1505, Elizabeth in 1506, Cicely in 1507, and John in 1509. He was a rising barrister, much employed in commercial cases. Moreover, in the spring of 1504³, when epitaph tells us, seventeen years. He died in 1522.

¹ 'Meditabatur sacerdotium cum Lilio suo.'

² Lily's wife, Agnes, died before him, having been married, as her only twenty-six, he had been summoned as a burgess to parliament. In that capacity, indeed, he incurred some danger, by the boldness with which he resisted the unconstitutional demands of the ministers of Henry VII. Roper tells us that the king, to show his displeasure, imprisoned his father in the Tower, till he should pay a fine of £100. And it has been conjectured¹ that a visit to Louvain and Paris, in the year 1508, was only a prudent retirement, for a short time, from political life.

³ Bishop Stubbs, Lectures on . . . Medieval and Modern History, 1887,

But these events did not seriously disturb More's happiness, which centred in his home. There, at the latter end of 1505—his marriage year—he had Erasmus for a guest. The converse of two such spirits may be imagined better than described. The tangible form it took was the composition of epigrams, and the translation of some dialogues of Lucian from the Greek into Latin². As far as Erasmus was concerned, this may have been only so much literary work, of a kind likely to be read, which promised to bring him in much-needed remuneration. But More's selection from the old Greek satirist was probably made with a deeper object. The very titles of two of the three dialogues chosen are suggestive: Cynicus and Philopseudes. His attraction to the first of these he justifies by the example of St. Chrysostom, who had incorporated a large portion of it in a homily on St. John. The second he commends as specially useful for his own generation. 'This profit, at any rate,' he says in his dedicatory letter to Ruthall, afterwards Bishop of Durham³, 'the Dialogue will bring us, that we shall

p. 416, points out that no parliament was held in 1502, the year in which More is sometimes said to have opposed the demand in question. As the grant was actually made in 1504, he thinks that More 'probably was instrumental in limiting the sum.'

¹ See Bridgett's Life, p. 44.

² These were printed at Paris, 'in aedibus Ascensianis,' in the following year, 1506, under the title of Luciani compluria obuscula, &c. See the Bibliotheca Erasmi, now being compiled by M. Vander Haeghen, Librarian of the University of Ghent. They were reprinted in 1512 and 1516. The first edition of Erasmus's Epigrammata was also in 1506, at Strasbourg.

³ The letter is included in the Lucubrationes, 1563, pp. 273-7. Bishop Ruthall was the founder of Cirencester school.

not put faith in impostures (magicis praestigiis), and that we shall be free from the superstition which is everywhere creeping over us under the guise of religion. Moreover [it will make us] spend a less solicitous life; I mean, one less terrified by gloomy and superstitious falsehoods'—the confident and authoritative assertion of which he goes on to denounce. 'Cease to wonder,' he continues, 'if the minds of the uneducated multitude are impressed by these fictions. The men they come from only think they have achieved a success, or won the lasting favour of Christ, if they have invented an untrue story about some saint, or a tragic tale of those in hell (de inferis tragoediam), for poor old women to cry hysterically over, or shudder at in terror. There is hardly any life of a martyr, or of a virgin, that they have passed by, without inserting some lies of this description—piously, of course; for otherwise there would have been a danger of truth not being self-sufficient, unless propped up by falsehoods! They have not shrunk from polluting with figments a religion founded by Him who was the very Truth; whose will it was that it should stand in naked truth. They have not perceived that fables of this description, so far from being of service to it, are of all things the most dangerous obstacle.'

I have given these extracts at some length, as being expressive of More's feelings then and long after. In these first-fruits of his studies in Greek, as he calls his productions later on in the same letter, we have the spirit of the New Learning in its better and purer aspect. When Étienne Dolet, on reaching the word 'Literae' in his great Thesaurus, paused to take a review of contemporary men of letters, it was not without reason that he cited More, with Linacre, as representatives of English enlightenment. As he viewed in thought the long procession sweeping past, with Bembo and Sadolet to carry the banner of Italy, Erasmus that of Holland, and the rest, he could well exclaim: 'Quels hommes, et de quel cœur ils combattent pour la cause de la liberté¹.'

¹ Buisson: Répertoire des Ouvrages Pédagogiques du xvi^e siècle, 1886, Préf. p. viii.

Animated as he was with such a spirit as his early epigrams and translations show, the accession of Henry VIII in April, 1509, must have seemed to More the earnest of a new and brighter era. In a long congratulatory ode which he wrote on the coronation, he calls the day that witnessed the ceremony 'the end of bondage, the beginning of freedom.' 'Now the magistracies and public offices, that were wont to be sold to bad men, were freely bestowed on the good.' And, quoting Plato's thought of the recurrence of aeons, he avers that now at length, after an iron age, the age of gold has come back again¹.

In the following year, however, sorrow came. His young wife, the 'Ioanna uxorcula Mori' of his tender epitaph, died in 1510, and the happy household in Bucklersbury passed through their first great trial together. If More seems to have been comforted full soon, marrying a second wife before the year had run out, it is not for us to judge him. He was absorbed in professional and other work. He had just been made Under-Sheriff² of London, an office which would bring him much labour of a judicial kind. His young children must have needed a mother's care. And so he married Alice Myddelton, a widow with one daughter of the same name, who thus became added to the household. The stepmother did her duty by the children, and her husband trained her assiduously, as he had done his first young wife, in literature and music. But one trace of the sorrow of his heart may perhaps be found in the publication about this time of a Life of Johan Picus, Erle of Myrandula, which he had before drawn up, with a selection from his Letters, and a translation of his touching Prayer³.

The next few years of More's life must have been years of

¹ Lucubrations, pp. 182-9.

² On the title-page of the Utopia More is called Viccomes, as if Sheriff, for which that is the recognized Latin term. This perplexed Burnet, who could not find More's name in the lists of Sheriffs. See the Preface to his Translation, 1753, p. ix.

³ The book was printed by Wynkyn de Worde, in small quarto, without date. A barrister of More's Inn, Mr. J. M. Rigg, lately reprinted it with a valuable Introduction and notes, Lond. 1890.

incessant activity. He was made a Bencher of his Inn, and in 1511 was called upon to 'read' there. His practice at the Bar had so increased that he made 'without grief,' as Roper tells us, from it and from his appointments together, an income of more than £400 a year, equivalent to at least ten times as much now. In the letter to Peter Giles, prefixed to the Utopia, he has drawn a picture of this busy life¹. And yet, in the midst of it all, he found time to write, or translate², the History of Richard III, and thus earn a title to be considered the first writer of English prose, properly so called.

It should have been mentioned that in 1508 he had been made free of the Mercers' Company³, and would thus be drawn into the current of that communal life, as it existed in this foremost of the city guilds, which in those days had something of reality about it, and may have suggested some of the features of his communistic romance. In the council-chamber of that Company he would meet his friend Colet, now Dean of St. Paul's, a Mercer and the son of a Mercer, and with him would often talk over the foundation of his great school, the walls of which were rising at the east end of the cathedral. That school of St. Paul's, the first in this country in which Greek was publicly taught, was an embodiment of the principles of Humanism at its best⁴. For it Erasmus wrote text-books, and for it, when sharing the obloquy to which its founder was exposed, More stood forth as a champion. His words in its defence have been prophetic. The enemies of good learning

¹ See below, p. 3.

² Mr. Archbold, the author of the article on Cardinal Morton in the Dict. of National Biography, comes to the conclusion that Morton probably wrote the history in Latin, and More translated it into English.

³ Account of the Hospital of St. Thomas of Acons by Mr. John Watney (privately printed), 1892, p. 87. The evidence, though not absolutely certain, seems to leave no reasonable doubt that the Thomas More then made free of the Company was the future Chancellor.

⁴ It is worthy of note that the late Dr. Karl Hartfelder, of Heidelberg, whose works entitle him to speak with high authority on such a subject, singled out St. Paul's as the type of a Humanist school—'das Ideal einer Humanistenschule'; and read a paper on it, under this title, before a conference of professors at Munich, in May, 1891. See the Zeitschrift für das Gymnasialwesen. Berlin, 1891, p. 711.

perceive, he wrote to Colet¹, that 'just as there came forth from the Trojan horse Greeks, who laid waste barbarian Troy, so from your school are coming forth scholars, who refute and overthrow their ignorance.' It was but the length of Chepe that separated St. Paul's School, at one end, from More's house at the other. And not often has that busy thoroughfare borne a greater share in the history of learning than when, in 1510, Lily began to teach under the shadow of the cathedral, and Erasmus wrote his Praise of Folly under More's roof².

Whether it be true, or not, that between the date of his leaving Bucklersbury, and that of his forming a larger household at Chelsea, he resided for a while at Crosby Place, Bishopsgate³, More's life was in the fullest sense that of a citizen. His reputation as a lawyer, his office of under-sheriff, and his connexion with the guild of the Mercers, combined to point him out as a fit person to defend the legal rights and privileges of his fellow-citizens.

And so when, in 1514, disputes were becoming acute between the London merchants and their foreign competitors, who were quartered among them, and a commission was talked of for settling these disputes, it was earnestly desired that More might be a member of it. In Roper's words, he was, 'at the suit and instance of the English Merchauntes,' sent as an ambassador 'in certaine great causes betweene them and the Merchauntes of the Stilliard.' But the matters in dispute were not merely the rival interests of the English and Hanseatic merchants in London, but the interests of all English exporters of wool, then the staple commodity of our trade. As far back as the thirteenth century, it had been asserted that 'all the world was clothed from English wool wrought in Flanders⁴.' Henry III had

¹ Stapleton: Tres Thomae, ed. 1612, p. 166, quoted by Seebohm, p. 251.

² The earliest edition of the Encomium Moriae yet discovered by M. Vander Haeghen (see the Bibliotheca before mentioned) is that of Strasbourg, 'mense Augusto,' 1511. An 'édition douteuse,' of the same year, at Antwerp, is also mentioned. This seems to point to 1510, or the early part of 1511, as the date of the composition of the piece.

³ Bridgett's Life, p. 139; Besant's London, 1892, p. 138.

⁴ See Hallam's Middle Ages, ch. ix. pt. ii.

given the Hanse traders a guildhall or factory in London; and their successors enjoyed many privileges, in what Hallam calls 'the capricious vacillations of our mercantile policy.' It was doubly important, therefore, that if cloths of Flemish manufacture were freely introduced into England, Flemish ports should not be closed against the admission of English wool. This untoward event had now come about. The breaking-off of the proposed marriage between Prince Charles, the son of Philip, Archduke of Austria (afterwards Charles V), and the Princess Mary, sister of Henry VIII, had caused the English government, as a mark of displeasure, to forbid the exportation of wool to Holland and Zealand. This was soon felt to be as injurious to the native as to the foreigner, and so a legation, of which More was junior member, was sent to the Low Countries in May, 1515, to re-adjust the commercial relations. It was evidently a case in which great tact would be necessary. Hence so able a man as Tunstall was chosen for the chief of the embassy. It is sufficient here to add, that the objects of the mission were attained, and More returned to London towards the end of the year¹. It was during the enforced leisure of the months spent in the Low Countries in 1515, that More composed the Second Book (the one first written) of his Utopia. The First Book, meant to be a setting to the other, was written in the spring or summer of 1516, when Wolsey was trying hard to draw its author into the immediate service of the court.

Now that we have reached this point, there is no necessity for following out the life of More in detail. Our object was merely to show from what antecedents the Utopia sprung. The immediate causes of its appearance will be discussed more particularly in the next section. The dates of a few succeeding events may be just indicated in conclusion.

On Evil May-day, 1517, More was requested by the Privy Council to use his influence with the excited mob, who had

¹ The progress of the embassy may be followed in Brewer: Letters and Papers, vol. ii. pt. i. See the Introduction, p. lvi. and n. for More's mission; p. cxiii. for Tunstall's cha-

acter (he was not made Master of the Rolls till May 12, 1516, ib. no. 1882); and no. 1551 for More's arrival home.

attacked the houses of the foreign merchants. In this arduous task, for one moment, it seemed as if he would have succeeded, and become an illustration of the fine simile of the poet:—

Ac veluti magno in populo cum saepe coorta est Seditio, &c.

But popular passions were too strong.

In 1518, if not before, he was made Master of Requests, and sworn of the Privy Council; in 1520 he attended the King to the Field of the Cloth of Gold¹, where he would have abundant opportunity for recalling some of the sentiments expressed in his romance; in 1521 he was knighted² and made Under-Treasurer; in 1523 he removed to his final home at Chelsea, where he lived the almost Utopian life that Erasmus has so charmingly described³; the same year he was made Speaker of the House of Commons; in 1529 (Oct. 29) he was made Lord High Chancellor, an office which he resigned in 1532 (May 6); in 1534 came his refusal of the Oath of Supremacy, and committal to the Tower; and in 1535 his trial and execution (July 6)⁴, an act which will ever be a stain on the memory of Henry VIII.

¹ See the Rutland Papers (Camden Society's Publications), 1842, p. 33, where More's name comes among the Esquires. On June 6, 1522 (ib. p. 95n.), he is 'one Sir Thomas More, Knight, and well learned.'

² For the date, which has often been incorrectly given, see the correspondence in Notes and Queries, July 18, 1891, p. 46; and also the preceding note.

³ The date of Erasmus's letter to Budé, in which this description occurs, is given as 1521 (Jortin, i. 260; iii. 68). This, if correct, would make the letter too early to refer to Chelsea. But a date two years later would remove the difficulty caused by calling young John More a boy of 'about thirteen.'—See Bridgett's Life, p. 114 n. The description of Judge More as 'non minorem annis octoginta,' while in any case an exaggeration, would suit the later date better than the earlier.

For the subsequent history of More's house, see Beaver's Memorials of Old Chelsea, 1892, pp. 118-140, and Mr. Sidney Lee's article in the Dictionary of National Biography. The grounds extended across the line of the present Beaufort Street, formerly Beaufort Row.

⁴ I do not remember to have seen quoted, on this subject, a letter of Tielman Gravius, or a Fossa, dated 16 Cal. Sep. (August 17), 1535. It is at p. xxiii. of Burscher's Spicilegia, 1784-1802. After giving some particulars of the death of Fisher and More, the writer adds: 'Nec tutum est percontari in toto regno quam ob causam boni illi Viri capitis supplicio affecti sunt.' His informant was Arnold Birckmann, who was in England at the time, and in part an eye-witness.

§ 2. CIRCUMSTANCES THAT GAVE RISE TO THE UTOPIA.

The events that led to More's embassy into Flanders, where the greater portion of the Utopia was written, have been partly related in the last section. With regard to this embassy, he tells us himself that he and his fellow envoys first met with the deputies of the Flemish government at Bruges; that, after due conference, when they could not agree on all points, these deputies withdrew to Brussels, 'to know their Prince's pleasure'; and that he himself, 'for so his business lay,' went on to Antwerp. As it is in Antwerp that he lays the scene of his meeting with Hythloday, we need not speculate further as to his movements in the Low Countries.

Though this was not More's first visit to the continent¹, there would be much to excite his curiosity in the busy towns of Flanders. We have seen that his thoughts had long been turned to the subject of civil communities; and here he would find the tide of social life flowing vigorously, and in new channels. Bruges was famous for the splendour of its buildings, and the extent of its foreign trade, in which it had surpassed Ghent. It contained, if Guicciardini's statement be not incredible², 35,000 houses. Though Antwerp, its younger rival, had begun to draw much of its trade away from it, it was still one of the four depôts of the Hanseatic league, London being another. We can thus easily imagine that More, who had, besides the general business of the embassy, matters to settle with which he had been individually charged by the London merchants, would find much to occupy him both at Bruges and Antwerp. He would be inevitably led to compare the methods of business, the forms of municipal government, the manners and customs, of these flourishing towns with those of his own city. Even such details as the width and cleanliness of the streets were evidently carefully studied by him; and the results, as he idealized them, were shadowed forth in his City of Amaurote.

¹ See note above, p. xxii.

² Quoted by Hallam: Middle Ages, ed. 1869, p. 616.

The circuit of the walls of Bruges is said to have been more than 15,000 yards, or nearly nine miles¹. If so, it must have had much open space within it, and so have presented a great contrast to the closely-built city of London, with its narrow, ill-paved, unsavoury streets, at times little better than open sewers². More had, no doubt, often compared those noisome alleys with the fair dwellings of the nobility along the Strand, with their gardens stretching down to the shining Thames, and their open view across the river on to the Surrey hills. And as he mentally compared them now with the broad wharves of the 'city of many bridges,' the thought came into his mind of what should be in his ideal Amaurote. And so it is ordained that in that city all the streets shall be of ample width³. In the rear of every house is to be a garden, with 'all maner of fruites, herbes and flowers'; so that every street there must have been as sweet-smelling as his own Bucklersbury in 'simple-time.'

But municipal life, at least in these its outer forms, was not the only thing then forcing itself upon More's thoughts. As he had once before had to choose, after a severe mental struggle, between the clerical life and the lay, so now he must decide whether to abide by the profession he had chosen, or be drawn into the vortex of a court. His being sent at a youthful age

¹ Guicciardini, as before.

² Writers who have studied the subject seem at a loss for language uncomplimentary enough to describe the state of the streets in London during this period. Even after the middle of the century they are said to have been 'little better than narrow lanes, undrained, often unpaved, and the nightly receptacle of filth of all kinds.'—Select Works of Robert Crowley, ed. by J. M. Cowper, 1872, Introd. p. xiv. See also Brewer: Reign of Henry VIII, i. p. 266 n. What Prof. Brewer there says of the beauty of the situation of the noblemen's houses on the north bank of the Thames, must be understood of the view in front. The Strand which flanked them was in such a bad state that 'in 1522-3 an act was passed for the paving of that "very noyous, foul, and jeopardous" highway, the Strand, by the owners of houses and lands along its course.' Eccleston: English Antiquities, 1847, p. 287.

³ Twenty feet, which is what More allows (infr. p. 130), may seem to us now a very modest width. But it may be remembered that the upper end of Ludgate Hill, one of the busiest thoroughfares in London, was, until a few years ago, only about a third wider.

as a burgess to parliament, his being chosen to serve on the present commission, and now the urgent solicitations of Wolsey, must all have appealed to the spirit of vanity or ambition, if there were any such within him. In his desire to escape from service at court, More was perfectly sincere. 'No one,' writes Erasmus, 'ever strove more eagerly to gain admission there than More did to avoid it.' But it would be idle to suppose that such a decision would not cost him anxious thought. And, as he turned over in his mind the ways of kings and courts, as they must then have presented themselves to a close observer, what were likely to be his reflections?

The two princes he was most nearly concerned with, at the moment, were those betwixt whom he was going as an ambassador, his own sovereign and Prince Charles. What had been Henry's exploits during the past two or three years? There had been an expedition against France, in the summer of 1512, conjointly with Ferdinand of Spain, in which the English contingent had miserably failed. A second expedition, to retrieve the disgrace, had been organized at great cost the following year, but with so little approval on the part of thoughtful men, that Dean Colet, who preached the Lent sermons before the court in 1513, was denounced by the war party as damping the spirits of the soldiery. The result gained by this was the capture of Tournay and Terouenne, an empty success; while the Scots, under James IV, had tried to serve England as England was serving France, and some of the best blood of both countries had reddened the field of Flodden.

'The right highe and mightye Kyng of Castell,' as More styles him, was, at the time of his writing the words, a youth of fifteen. He had been proclaimed King of Castile when a mere child. On the death of his father, the archduke Philip, in September, 1506, he was left, the heir of splendid prospects, with a mother, deranged in mind, as her grandmother had been before her, unable to bring herself to sign a state paper, or take any interest in public affairs¹. A few years later, an absolute jealousy of the boy prince took possession of the mind of his grandfather Ferdinand, who looked on him as a rival rather than as an heir¹. So that, when the English embassy reached the Low Countries in the spring of 1515, instead of being able to address themselves to a responsible sovereign, they had to deal with a regency, swayed by many conflicting interests.

¹ Prescott: Ferdinand and Isabella, ed. 1886, p. 642.

If he extended his survey beyond the concerns of England and Castile, a keen observer like More would find presented to him, in the aspect of Europe at large, a political chess-board, affording ever fresh matter for satirical, if not sardonic, reflection. In 1508, by the League of Cambray, some of the chief pieces on the board—the Emperor, the Pope, King Ferdinand and King Louis—had been combined together against the unhappy republic of Venice. When the victory of the French at Agnadello had satisfied the ambition of Julius II, he was disposed to rest content with his gains, and made it his object, in turn, to keep the power of France from growing too high. If this meant a dissolution of existing treaties, what were treaties made for, but to be broken? ‘A Prince that is wise and prudent,’ writes Machiavelli, ‘cannot nor ought not to keep his parole, when the keeping of it is to his prejudice, and the causes for which he promised, removed².’ Unfortunately, while the chief players, like Xerxes in Atossa’s dream, retained their thrones, whether successful or unsuccessful, the pawns, their subjects, were swept away unpitied. Their cries could not yet make themselves heard. ‘Regi dissentit nemo,’ wrote More³, ‘malum hoc gravius.’

The domestic life, no less than the public policy, of the reigning sovereigns would in many cases have afforded equal matter for sarcastic comments. In particular, the selfish and at once had Charles proclaimed afresh in Madrid.

¹ Prescott: Ferdinand and Isabella, ed. 1886, p. 685. By her will, dated Oct. 12, 1504, Queen Isabella had left the regency of the kingdom of Castile, during the minority of her grandson, and the mental incapacity of his mother, to her husband Ferdinand. He died in January, 1516, leaving Cardinal Ximenes regent, who

² Works (English translation), 1675, p. 223.

³ Epigram on ‘Quis optimus rei-publicae status?’ The similarity of this title to that of the Utopia should be noticed. They stand in the relation of question and answer.

unscrupulous arrangements often made for the marriage of their children, the utter disregard of human affections, the matrimonial bartering of mere infants, may have roused the spirit of Democritus in More, and suggested to him, in a mocking humour, the custom by which the intending bride and bridegroom in Utopia might at least enter into their contract with eyes open.

Arthur, Prince of Wales, 'could hardly have been more than a twelvemonth old, when a proposal was made by Henry to Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain for his marriage, as soon as he should reach a suitable age, to their infant daughter Katherine, who was just nine months older¹.' At the beginning of 1502 the marriage actually took place, and in April, four months after, the boy-bridegroom died. Prince Charles of Castile was barely out of his cradle, when he was betrothed to the little daughter of Louis XII of France. But this project, though ratified at least twice afterwards by formal treaties, never came to anything. When the Duke of Brittany died in 1488, he left two daughters, of whom the elder, Anne, was not quite twelve. She had for suitors Charles VIII of France, and the Emperor Maximilian, whose own daughter, by the treaty of Arras, was betrothed to this same Charles. After being married by proxy to Maximilian, whom she had never seen, and assuming, as his consort, the title of Queen of the Romans, she was persuaded to repudiate the unreal union, and in 1491, a girl of fourteen, became the queen of Charles². To find a suitable bride for James IV of Scotland, a man of thirty, a treaty was made for the hand of Margaret of England, then a child of eleven. This was on January 24, 1502. Being still of such tender years, it was stipulated that 'her father should not be obliged to send her to Scotland before the first of September, 1503³.' But her dowry was carefully provided for, whatever contingencies might arise. The year before

¹ Gairdner: Henry the Seventh, History, 1887, pp. 387, 418.
pp. 88-9.

² Tytler: History of Scotland, 1864,

³ Ib., p. 86. Compare also Stubbs: Lectures on Medieval and Modern ii. p. 269, quoting Rymer.

More wrote, her sister Mary, whose early affections had been won by Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, was sold, at the age of sixteen, to be a bride to the old King of France, as one of the conditions of a treaty for peace. She was 'consigned to age and decrepitude, instead of to the most gallant of English knights.' But nature avenged herself in this case also. On November 5, 1514, she was crowned Queen of France. On the New Year's day following, Louis XII was dead; and Mary, after this humiliation, became the wife of Brandon.

As More called to mind such instances, and reflected on the disappointments and misery thus caused, he may well have felt impelled to raise a protest for the personal liberty of the human being in this important act of his life, and his freedom, if but his animal freedom, to choose or refuse his mate.

But a thing of far more importance in his eyes than the ways of kings or emperors must have been the condition of the people. At home, in his earlier years, he had witnessed the extortions of Empson and Dudley. In his Epigrammata, which are the chips from his workshop, we may see how actively his thoughts had been employed on the subject of greed, public or private; on the difference between a good ruler and a bad, between a lawful king and a tyrant¹. More's own sentiments are perhaps most tersely summed up in the lines:

'Tutus erit, populum qui sic regit, utilio rem
Ut populus nullum censeat esse sibi².'

In his own country he had seen but too many instances in which the interests of king and people did not seem to coincide, where the people must have doubled the utility of their rulers. The sight of the prosperous weavers of Bruges and Antwerp must have increased his compassion for the farm-labourers at home, ever more and more dispossessed of their homesteads,

¹ Epigrams 'In Avarum' begin the Progyrnasmata, and such titles as 'Dives avarus pauper est sibi' occur among the Epigrammata. The number of those on 'Tyranni,' 'Prin-cipes,' &c. is considerable.

² End of the epigram headed 'Regem non satellitium sed virtus reddidit tutum.'

that fresh land might be turned into pasture, and wool produced for the consumption of the foreign looms. The subject is so familiar, that I am ashamed to quote authorities that to many of my readers must be commonplace. A very few shall suffice.

The preamble of an Act passed almost while More was writing (7 Hen. VIII, cap. 1),¹ recites that 'greate ynconvenyentes be and dayly encrease by desolacyon, pollyng downe, & destruction of houses & townes wythin this realme, and leyng to pasture londes which customably have been manured² & occupied wyth tyllage and husbandry, wherby Idelnes doth encrease.' Examples are then cited of the extent to which this depopulation had gone on. Townships of 200 people had been minished and decreased; husbandry greatly decayed, churches destroyed, and the service of God withdrawn. In the temperate Dialogue, which Starkey, a chaplain of Henry VIII, composed as appropriate to be put into the mouths of Pole and Lupset as interlocutors, there are many references to the disorders from which the country was suffering. And this decay, writes the editor, summing up the spirit of their colloquy, 'is generally attributed to sheep-farming and the enclosure of lands. Wherever the finest wool was grown, there noblemen and abbots enclosed all the land for pasture. They levelled houses and towns, and left nothing standing except the church, which they converted into a sheep-house³.'

These evictions, as we should now call them, could only lead to one of three endings. Men must either starve, or steal, or beg. The severity of the laws against vagabondage was powerless, as More points out below⁴, to remove or even extenuate the evil. 'Thys multytude of beggarys here in our countrey,'

¹ Quoted in Ballads from Manuscripts, ed. by F. J. Furnivall, 1868-72, i. p. 6.

² That is, manœuvred, or tilled by hand.

³ See J. M. Cowper's Introduction to the Dialogue (Early English Text Society's publications), p. cvi. This is almost a quotation from More's own description below, pp. 51-56. Much more to the same effect may be seen in the various Supplicacyons, edited in the same series by Mr. Cowper, 1871, pp. xvii, 95 sqq., and in the Introduction to Gascoigne's Loci by Prof. James E. Thorold Rogers, 1881, pp. xxiv-v.

⁴ Page 44.

Pole is made to say in the *Dialogue*¹, 'schowyth much pouerty, ye, and, as you say, also much idulnes and yl pollycy.' The cry was no mere factious cry, raised by reformers like Simon Fish. But it gathered strength and bitterness as the Reformation went on, because the dissolution of so many religious houses at one and the same time dried up springs of charity, and increased the number of those dependent on them.

Hence Lever, preaching before Edward VI in 1550², could exclaim: 'O mercyfull Lorde, what a numbere of Poore, Feble, Haulte, Blynde, Lame, sycklye, yea, with idle vacaboundes, and dissemblyng kaityffes mixt among them, lye and creepe, beggyng in the myrie streates of London and Westminster.'

So far as remedies could be provided by law, More, through his spokesman Hythloday, is at one with the Parliament of 1516. 'Make a lawe,' says he³, 'that they whiche plucked downe fermes and townes of husbandrie, shal re-edifie them, or els yelde and uprender the possession therof to suche as wil go to the cost of buylding them anewe.' This was almost identical with the language of the Act (7 Hen. VII, cap. 1) already quoted. It is there ordained that 'all suche townes, villages, etc. shalbe by the said owner or owners . . . within oon yeare next after suche wylfull decaie, re-edified & made ageyn mete & convenyent for people to dwelle.' But the evil was too deep and far-reaching, being, to some degree, one inseparable from a period of transition, to be cured by Acts of Parliament.

¹ Dialogue, as before, p. 91. See also the ballad Nowe-a-Dayes, ed. by F. J. Furnivall, lines 157 sqq.

² Sermons by Thomas Lever, ed. by Arber, 1870, p. 77.

³ Page 57. The writer of an able article on the Utopia in The Month and Catholic Review, 1874, p. 168, has some sensible remarks on the subject. 'There is no denying,' he says, 'the accuracy of More's description of pampered abundance and helpless destitution, those two plague-spots on the face of society. But it is one thing to identify a disease, another thing to devise a remedy that shall be adapted to the strength of the patient. Human nature is too sickly to be taken for change of air to Plato's city of Mansoul, or More's island of Utopia. Some people are fond of the text: they had all things in common. But they forget the beginning of it: the multitude of believers had one heart and one soul (Acts iv. 32). Union of faith and charity preceded the union of property. And still through faith and charity lies the only road to a salutary and practical communism, that of the city of God on earth.'

And so More, whose sagacious eye foresaw the rapid approach of that state of things which we find Starkey and others lamenting, a few years later on, as having actually come to pass, could devise no more effectual remedy than the spread of a wide spirit of communism. He professes, indeed, to argue against this opinion, which he puts into the mouth of Hythloday. But, as desperate diseases require desperate remedies, it is pretty certain that he wished these doctrines to work in the minds of the thinkers of his age, if only as an antidote to the policy, as blind as it was selfish, which turned adrift farm-labourers and discarded serving-men to steal or beg, and then hanged them, by twenty on a gallows, for stealing.

§ 3.—FRAMEWORK OF THE STORY.

There can be no doubt that for the groundplan of his story More was indebted to the Voyages of Amerigo Vespucci. He himself says of his imaginary narrator, Hythloday, that 'for the desire he had to see and knowe the farre countreyes of the worlde, he joyned himselfe in company with Americke Vespuce, and in the iii. last voyages of those iiii. that be nowe in printe and abrode in every mannes handes, he continued styll in his company, savyng that in the last voyage he came not home agayne with him. For he made suche meanes and shift . . . that he gotte licence of mayster Americke (though it were sore against his wyll) to be one of the xxiiii. whiche in the ende of the last voyage were left in the countrey of Gulike¹' After the departure of Vespucci from this last-mentioned settlement, Hythloday is represented as starting, with five Gulikian natives, in quest of fresh adventures. He roams through many countries, and at last, 'by merveyulous chauce,' reaches Taprobane (Cyprus), whence he gets to Caliquit on the Malabar coast, and at last, meeting with a Portuguese vessel, reaches home, contrary to every one's expectation.

It is in these wanderings through many countries that the imaginary traveller is supposed to discover and visit Utopia.

¹ For the origin of the name Gulike, see the note below, p. 28.

But besides the general suggestion thus derived, a slight inspection of those four Voyages, 'that be nowe in printe and abrode in every mannes handes,' will show how attentively More had studied them, and how many accessories for his picture he had borrowed from them.

In a little tract of four leaves, without date or place of publication, but simply entitled *Mundus nouus*¹, Vespucci gives an account of his second voyage, on which he started from Lisbon, May 14, 1501. He wrote it originally in Italian, as a letter to Lorenzo de' Medici, and this has been turned by a 'iocundus interpres' into Latin. The voyage was past the Canary islands to Cape Verde. In those regions—the voyager names them very vaguely—'the people live according to nature, and may be called Epicureans rather than Stoics . . . Property they have none, but all things are in common. They live without a king, without any sovereignty, and every one is his own master.' And a little later on: 'No kinds of metals are known there except gold, in which those regions abound. This fact was told us by the inhabitants, who asserted that in the inland parts was a great quantity of gold, and that it was not prized or held of any account there².' This account was repeated, and expanded in some particulars, in the later treatise referred to by More, in which an account is given of the first four voyages of Vespucci³. 'Gold, pearls, jewels,' the traveller relates, 'and all other such like things, which in this Europe of ours we count riches, they think nothing of; nay, they utterly despise them, and care not to have them⁴.' Compare with this what More says of the Utopians⁵:—'And these metalles [gold and silver], which other nations do as greuously and sorowefully forgo, as in a manner their owne lives, if they should altogether at ones be taken from the Utopians, no man there would thinke that he had lost the

¹ The press-mark of the copy I have seen in the British Museum is G. 6534.

² Leaf iii. 'Nulla ibi metallorum,' &c.

³ Quattuor Americi Vesputii Navigationes, appended to Cosmographia

Introductio, 4^o, printed at St. Dié in the Vosges, iij. Kal. Sept. 1507. A copy in the British Museum is press-marked C. 20 b. 39.

⁴ Leaf A. viii.

⁵ Infra, p. 176.

worth of one farthing. They gather also pearles by the sea-side, and diamondes and carbuncles upon certen rockes, and yet they seke not for them; but by chaunce finding them they cut and polish them. And therewith thei deck their yonge infautes.'

It is in the account of the fourth voyage that the incident occurs, which more than anything else suggested the historical setting for the Utopia. A few words about this voyage may therefore be fitly premised.

According to his own account, Vespucci started on the 10th of May, 1503; but Varnhagen has shown good reasons for regarding this as a slip for the 10th of June¹. After reaching the Cape Verde islands, where they stayed a month, the consort ships struck out SW., in search of Serra Leoa (Sierra Leone). They crossed the line, and on Aug. 10, when now in lat. 3° south, they sighted an island, which may be identified as Fernando de Noronha. Here the chief vessel, of 300 tons, struck on a reef, and was wrecked. Vespucci, who was in command of a ship four leagues off, was ordered to go in search of a harbour. In this quest he got permanently separated from his consorts, with the exception of one vessel, which waited with him a considerable time at Bahia in hopes of news of the rest. The two captains then determined to go on exploring the coast southwards, and at length reached a harbour, which, according to Varnhagen, could be no other than that of Cape Frio. Here they took in a quantity of brazil wood for dyeing, and determined to leave on the spot a small garrison, or factory, of twenty-four men, with arms and provisions; which done, they sailed away, and finally reached Lisbon on June 28, 1504².

¹ Amerigo Vespucci, son caractère, ses écrits, etc., par F. A. de Varnhagen, ministre du Brésil . . . Lima, 1865, p. 114. M. de Varnhagen remarks that the voyager's name was accented Amerigo, as still at Florence, and not Amérigo. Dibdin has the odd notion that he was called Americanus, from being the first writer who gave an account of America. See p. 27 n. of his edition of the Utopia, 1808.

² As the passage is important, from its bearing on More's conception, it may be worth while to give it in the original:—'Relictis igitur in castello prefato Christicolis xxiiij. et cum illis xij. machinis ac aliis pluribus armis, vna cum prouisione pro sex mensibus

On this suggestive hint the imagination of More had fastened, and out of it he constructed the first framework of his romance. Vespucci had described their penetrating some forty leagues inland, before leaving for home, and ascertaining the disposition of the inhabitants to be friendly. Hythloday is made to relate how the settlers dwelt among the natives 'not only harmlesse, but also occupying (trafficking) with them verye familiarly.' He adds, that in the course of lengthy journeys, like Vespucci's of forty leagues, they found 'townes and cities and weale publiques, full of people, governed by good and holsome lawes.'

One of these 'weal publiques' was Utopia, and it is needless to attempt to define its situation more closely. More places it between Brazil and India, 'beyond the line equinoctial'; but to give its latitude and longitude would require the genius of a Ptolemy, who could discover a Siatutanda in his Tacitus, and then assign to it a local habitation.

Utopia, and its eponymic King Utopus, bore names expressive of the nonentity of the imaginary islanders. By-and-by it became an obvious play on the Latin form of the word to make U- represent Eu-, and so convert this Nusquamia into a sort of Island of the Blest¹. Hence the poet laureate of the islanders is made to say:

Utopia priscis dicta ob infrequentiam,
Nunc civitatis aemula Platonicae . . .
Eutopia merito sum vocanda nomine;

while Budé, in his letter to Lupset, chooses to call it Udepotia, as if Nunquamia, not Nusquamia.

Having thus found a stage sufficiently removed in Cloudland, sufficiente, nec non pacata nobiscum telluris illius gente . . . introiuimus.' Leaf F iii. vers. of the Quattvor Navigationes. In 1511 the factory was found still stationed on an island in the harbour.—See Major's Life of Prince Henry of Portugal, 1868, p. 379.

¹ The subject was re-discussed in Notes and Queries, Seventh Series, v. pp. 101, 229, 371. Sir James Mackintosh sums up the matter rightly, in saying that 'all the names which he invented for men or places were intimations of their being unreal, and were perhaps, by treating with raillery his own notions, intended to silence gainsayers.'—Miscellaneous Works, 1851, p. 197. He adds the remark of Joseph Scaliger that Obronia is a word not formed according to analogy.

More brings his actors upon it. But the dramatic element in his romance is of the simplest. In the portion of the work first composed—the Second Book—there is none at all. It is merely a series of essays, under some eight or nine headings, in which, under the thin disguise of a fictitious narrative, he gives utterance to his own views on various social, political, or religious questions. That these views are all alike seriously propounded, as held by himself, it would be preposterous to maintain. Such a notion would be to crystallize what More purposely left in a state of solution. Much more sensible is the view of Sir James Mackintosh, that the writer regarded the theories he started ‘with almost every possible degree of approbation and shade of assent; from the frontiers of serious and entire belief, through gradations of descending plausibility, where the lowest are scarcely more than the exercises of the ingenuity, and to which some wild paradoxes are appended, either as a vehicle, or as an easy means, if necessary, of disavowing the serious intention of the whole of the Platonic fiction.’ If the reader should complain that, on this showing, it is impossible to be sure what More really meant, the remark would have been equally true of much of his conversation, when it was often hard to make out whether he spoke in jest or in earnest. Socrates and More would have understood each other¹. Much of what he committed to writing in his enforced

¹ Through want of perception of this, writers have been found to draw the most opposite conclusions as to the real nature and purport of the Utopia. The late Dean Hook held that the Second Book was intended ‘to expose the impracticability of those proposed reformations which lollardism had advanced, all founded on communism’ . . . ‘He showed that he was satirizing the lollards by the very title that he gave to his work, and to his chief speaker’ (Lives of the Archbishops, v. p. 482 n.). A Roman-catholic writer, on the other hand, Reinhold Baumstark, can see nothing in the theological part of the Utopia, but what is plainly anti-Christian, for which the author must be held up as a warning:—‘Allein abgesehen von dieser socialistischen Grundlage, ist der hochwichtige, das Religionswesen betreffende Theil des Buches, dessen Bedeutung abzuschwächen man sich vergebens bemüht hat, geradezu widerchristlich.’ As for More, he was ‘in Leben und Wandel ein unverbrüchlich treuer Anhänger der katholischen Kirche,’ but for ordinary mortals ‘ein warnendes Beispiel’ to keep them from being lured away by force of imagination from the right path.—Thomas Morus, Freiburg, 1879, p. 108.

leisure at Antwerp had probably been in his thoughts for years; may even have found partial expression in his Lectures on the Civitas Dei of Augustine. Its now taking definite form may have been hastened, as before suggested, by the life he saw about him in the Flemish towns, by the news from Spanish and other foreign merchants he would meet in the factory at Bruges, by the conversation he would have with Tunstall on the matters of State policy ever coming under that statesman's eye¹, by the letters that would reach him from home.

It only remained, when More had thus embodied his theories in the practice of an imaginary people, to give an air of vraisemblance to the whole; which he did by a fiction not unworthy of his favourite Lucian, of Rabelais or of Swift. He had met at Antwerp with a citizen of that town named Petrus Aegidius, or Giles. More's description of him might almost have served for one of himself. One day, after hearing mass at St. Mary's Cathedral, he espied his friend in conversation with a stranger, by his appearance a seafaring man². Being introduced to him by Giles, More had some talk with the new-comer; whom he found so interesting a companion, that he took him, with Giles, to his own house. There, in a garden at the back, seated on a grassy bank, the conversation was resumed. The stranger's name was Raphael Hythloday³; he was one of the twenty-four left by Vespucci, as above related, in the fort on the Brazil coast. Moreover he had sojourned in other days in England; he had sat at the table of More's friend and patron, Cardinal Morton, and had many anecdotes to tell of him. This led on the conversation to subjects dear to More's heart, the causes of destitution and crime, the administration of laws, the merits of various forms of civil government. In many of these respects, things were far better managed by the Utopians, whose institutions Hythloday had seen at work, than they were by the nations of Europe. More pressed him to describe this strange country and its ways minutely to them; and to this Hythloday consented. But as it was now midday, they would adjourn to dinner, and after that the relation should begin.

¹ Much State correspondence was at this time constantly passing through Tunstall's hands. See Brewer: Letters and Papers, ii. pt. i. p. cclxix.

² The incident is told in a most life-like manner below, p. 25.

³ For the name, see the note below, p. 27.

This relation forms the Second Book, already written. The setting to it, just described, forms the First Book, probably composed by More, when back again in London, in the spring or summer of 1516. In the mystification which his Swift-like verisimilitude produced, More was well assisted by two or three friends. Chief of these was Giles, who, as he tells us himself¹, contributed, besides a commendatory letter to Busleyden, the Utopian alphabet, the 'meter of iiiii. verses in the Utopian tongue,' and some of the marginal notes which appeared in the second edition. In fact, Giles's account² of the accident which prevented him from catching what Hythloday said about the exact situation of Utopia, is conceived in the same spirit, though not so artistically worked up, as the masterly touches of More himself, where he professes to want settled a point in dispute with John Clement, as to the exact width of the bridge over the Anyder. Other helpers in the first edition were Gerhard of Nimeguen, and Cornelius Grapheus, or Schreiber, of Alst; an account of whom will be found in its proper place below³.

§ 4.—COMPARISON OF THE UTOPIA WITH OTHER IDEAL SYSTEMS.

The constitution of the Utopians, according to the description given, dated back to the conquest of the country by Utopus, 1760 years before the time of Hythloday's visit. Its name was then Abraxa, and it was not an island but a peninsula. Utopus made it an island by cutting through an isthmus of fifteen miles. Since that time the prosperity of the community had steadily increased; so that instead of cottages with mud walls and roofs of thatch, and a people weakened by religious dissension, nothing was now to be seen but 'houses curiously builded, after a gorgeous and gallant sort,' with a happy and united population.

¹ Infra, p. xcviij.

² Page xcix.

³ Pp. 320, 322.

Their polity was a confederation of free states, each sending representatives to the general council of the central city, Amaurote, which thus ranked as the capital. There were in the island, including Amaurote, fifty-four of these states, each consisting of a city with its shire, or adjacent territory. No two cities were less than twenty-four miles apart, nor more than a day's journey on foot. In each were six thousand 'families,' besides an indefinite number of persons living in farmsteads out in the shire. The households in these farmsteads consisted of forty persons each, with two bondmen, under the rule of the goodman and his wife; the members coming in rotation from the number of the townspeople, in such a way that every one of them got two years of country life in turn. The city families were composed of members usually of the same kindred, but not all the children of two parents. Each family was to have not fewer than ten, nor more than sixteen, children of the age of fourteen or thereabouts allotted to it. Should the numbers in any one family become excessive, the superabundance was to be transferred to another that might be deficient. So with the total in one city as compared with another. If it should chance that the population in the whole island became excessive, unoccupied lands in adjacent countries were to be colonized; war being made on any people that resisted such an arrangement. 'For they count this the most just cause of war, when any people holdeth a piece of ground voyd and vacant, to no good nor profitable use.'

For their government, every thirty families are under a 'head bailiff,' anciently called a Syphograunt, but now a Phylarch. Every ten Syphograunts are under a superior officer, once called a Tranibore, but now in like manner a Chief Phylarch. All these are subject to annual election, but the Tranibores are not changed lightly. As there are six thousand families in each city, it follows that there will be in each two hundred Syphograunts. These elect the Prince¹, anciently called Barzanes, now Ademus, out of four candidates sent up to them, one from each of the four quarters or wards, by the inhabitants at large. The election is secret, and the office is held for life, 'unless he be deposed or put down for suspicion of tyranny.' The municipal council of each city is formed of the Tranibores, with the 'Prince' or mayor; two Syphograunts (fresh ones at each meeting) being summoned to their deliberations. These municipal councils are held every third day, or oftener if need be. The national council of the island meets once a year at Amaurote, and consists of representatives, three in number, from each of the cities.

The great principle on which the life of the Utopians is based, is community of goods. There is no private property; no use of money, except as a means of commercial intercourse with other nations. In this, More seems to have taken his idea from what he had read of Solon or Lycurgus. At intervals along each street the traveller would come to a 'great hall,' in which dwelt the Syphograunt and his wife. Hither, for the daily meals, would resort the members of the thirty families attached to each, as the members of the City Companies in London might have resorted to their Halls. More draws the picture of the social gathering, as it might often have presented itself to his eye in the Hall of his own Guild, or in that of Lincoln's Inn. There is the high table 'overthwart the over end of the hall.' At every table they sit 'four in a mess.' The Syphograunt and his wife—for there the women attend as well as the men—are in the place of honour, supported on either side by two of the 'auncientest and eldest.' Due provision is made for the young people, for children, for infants and their nurses. The food, which is plain but ample, has been fetched from the common market earlier in the day by stewards, but with a reservation of the very best for the hospitals, one of which, outside the walls, is provided for each of the four wards of the city.

¹ The use of the word Prince by the translators for the Latin princeps, seems to have led to the notion that the government in Utopia was monarchical; that there was a king over the whole island. Thus Morris speaks of there being 'bondslaves and a king' (Reprint of Robynson's Translation, 1893, pref., p. vi). But Utopia is expressly called a Republic. Its eponymic king, Utopus, vanished, like Lycurgus, after giving it a constitution, and left no successor. The princeps (mayor?) is the head of each city alone.

To provide the necessary supplies for maintaining this course of life, but very moderate labour is needed. And this for two reasons. First, there is no object in hoarding, or in superfluous expense, when all eat and dress alike; and secondly, the number of those excused from active labour is very small. Scarce five hundred in each city with its shire, not counting the aged and impotent, are so exempt. These form the learned class, from which are to be chosen ambassadors, the various public officers, and the priests. The privilege of admission to it comes from the people, 'persuaded by the commendation of the priests, and secret election of the Syphograunts.' If any one so privileged grows idle, he is 'plucked back,' and put to manual labour again. Contrariwise, if any artisan, by good employment of his leisure hours, has made profit in learning, he may be admitted among the scholares; not to have an easier life, but to have the opportunity of cultivating better his own proper talent.

Under these conditions, six hours' work a day is found to be sufficient, or even more than sufficient. Three hours are so devoted before dinner; after that comes a rest of two hours; and then another short spell of three hours brings them to supper-time. At eight o'clock all go to bed, to rise (two hours later than More is said himself to have done) at four. Lectures, and music, and honest games fill up the intervals of the day. For in the institution of that weal public 'this end is only and chiefly pretended and minded, that what time may possibly be spared from the necessary occupations and affairs of the commonwealth, all that the citizens should withdraw from the bodily service to the free liberty of the mind, and garnishing of the same.'

In their foreign policy the Utopians are not chivalrous. War they detest. With them bellum, whatever philologists may say, is res belluina. The abhorrence of bloodshed, which at home makes them class the hunter with the slaughterman, and leave both occupations to their serfs, prompts them, when forced to enter on a campaign, to resort to almost any means sooner than have recourse to a pitched battle. It is not that they are unprepared. They train themselves to martial exercises, and not their men only, but their women. If money be the sinews of war, of that, as spending none upon themselves, they have always plenty. But they prefer fighting with brain to fighting with muscle. And so, if driven to take the field, which is more often to help an oppressed neighbouring country than for their own interest, they try every expedient to save shedding the blood of their own people. They have no objection to let the Zapoteles shed their own in their cause; for of those objectionable mercenaries the more killed the better; and so they hire them in great numbers. But chiefly they endeavour to make away with the leaders of the nation they are at war with. And so they incite, by offers of immense rewards, any of their own subjects to compass their assassination. They are even ready to lure an invading fleet to its destruction by 'translating' the marks and signs which pilots have to guide their ships through the dangerous channels leading to their great harbour.

If some of these practices are repellent to us, we may be sure that they would seem not less so in the age of Bayard. More's plea might have been that, as the world then was, it was ever the old story: delirant reges, plectuntur Achivi. He would now turn the tables, and let it be seen whether there would be the same reckless eagerness for war, if the crowned head were sure to be the one first struck at.

More's last, and one of his longest chapters, is headed 'Of the religions in Utopia.' The space given to this subject is what we might have expected from one in whom the theologian predominated over the statesman. As the Utopians have very few laws, and of them the interpretation is so plain that every man is a cunning lawyer, so have they very few priests. These are men 'of exceeding holiness'; 'and therefore,' says the author somewhat sardonically, 'exceeding few.' The religion, or rather religions—for 'there be divers kinds' in the island—are described as various forms of nature-worship, culminating in a kind of deism, in which the more part worship 'one chief and principal God, the maker and ruler of the whole world, whom they all commonly in their country's language call Mithras.' Before the coming of Utopus they had been torn by religious dissensions. It was chiefly that which had weakened their resistance, and given him the victory over them. He, consulting more wisely for them, than they had done for themselves, ordained that 'it should be lawful for every man to favour and follow what religion he would, and that he might do the best he could to bring others to his opinion, so that he did it peaceably, gently, quietly, and soberly, without hasty and contentious rebuking and inveighing against others.' The only exception to this toleration was that, in case any denied the immortality of the soul, or the existence of a controlling providence, he should be 'deprived of all honours, excluded from all offices, and rejected from all common administrations in the weal public.' This, of course, was punishment; but no direct penalty, in the way of death or fine, was inflicted.

For the curious and instructive details of their public worship, with its prayers 'so made that every man may privately apply to himself that which is commonly spoken of all'; its priesthood, to which women of due age were admissible; and its music, 'for the most part of other fashions than these that we use in this part of the world'; the reader must be referred to the work itself.

In comparing the ideal thus briefly sketched with others that have preceded or followed it, our object must be, not to set these out in any detail, but simply to notice any points in which they markedly resemble, or differ from, the Utopia.

Of these, there is one that will attract us in the first place, not from its presenting any close parallel, but because More is known to have lectured upon it; I mean, the De Civitate Dei of St. Augustine. What line More took, in his discourses on this work, we can only conjecture¹, as unfortunately no record of them has been preserved.

But a short study of the De Civitate will disclose some features, common to it and the Utopia; on which, therefore, we may suppose that More would have dwelt, when lecturing to his City audience in the Church of St. Lawrence, Jewry.

The origin of Augustine's great work is too well known to need any preface. In 410 Rome was taken and sacked by the western barbarians². This appalling event, which no human language seemed adequate to describe, save by similitudes drawn from the Day of Judgement itself, was ascribed by numbers to the wrath of the older gods. Christianity had drawn men away from their worship; therefore Christianity was the guilty cause. To learn what answer could be made to this charge, a soldier, Marcellinus, applied to Augustine. His bishop's reply was expanded in time into the De Civitate Dei, in which both the accusations of the heathen were refuted, and the beginning and growth of that City of God described, which was to flourish and endure when every earthly Rome should have been destroyed. As this heavenly City has a dual existence, its citizens being at once the saints who have passed from human sight, and those who are still treading the earth; and as, moreover, this mundane side of it has always coexisted with an earthly rival, the City of the World³, it has not in itself such a local and separate habitation as would make it easy to be compared with More's ideal republic. In the conception, however, of a perfect order, as it prevailed in the City of God; in the due subordination of every member of the society, each being glad to do his own work and fall into his own place; in the community of goods, and in the

¹ See above, p. xxi.

² It was strange that More should himself live to relate another capture and sack of Rome. But this was so. The Imperialist forces took it in 1527. Their excesses, which More ascribes as much as he can to Lutherans, were such, at least in his description, as to make the blood run cold to hear of. See the English Works, pp. 258-9.

³ 'Quas in hoc interim sacculo perplexas quodam modo diximus invicemque permixtas.' Lib. xi. cap. i.

use and limitation of bond-service, we may perhaps trace a derivation of ideas from the De Civitate to the Utopia.

'Peace in the household,' says St. Augustine, 'springs from an agreement among the dwellers therein as to rule and obedience. They who provide for the welfare of others, bear rule; as husband over wife, parents over children, masters over servants. They who are thus provided for, obey And yet even those who rule are the servants of those over whom they seem to rule¹.'

These principles are reproduced and expanded in the Utopia. There every 'family' is under the rule of the oldest member, unless he be too infirm; if so, then under the next in age. Before divine worship, wives confess to their husbands what faults they have committed, children to their parents. In church, and at the daily meals, the younger sit or stand before the eyes of their elders, that decorum may be ever observed. The principle of order, in short, is rigid and all-pervading. So with the idea of membership of the body politic. In Utopia, if any one is found best fitted for the pursuit of learning, he passes into the class of those so occupied; not to be idle, but to work in the sphere that suits him best. If any others, not being fitted by nature for the contemplative life, desire the practical, the course is open to them. They enter it, and are happy and contented in their work. So it was in the polity drawn by Augustine, after the pattern traced out for him by St. Paul. No inferior, there, felt jealous of a superior². The hand complained not that it was not an eye. Whatever gift a member was endowed with, that he prized, and coveted not the gift of another.

On the community of goods, which indeed More may have taken directly from Plato, rather than from Augustine, something will be said further on³. A few words may be added on the subject of bondage, before we leave the Christian Father. Bondage, says St. Augustine, came in with sin. No bond-slave is mentioned in Scripture, till Noah pronounced serfdom to be the future doom of his undutiful son. *To whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants (bond-slaves) ye are to whom ye obey*¹. Hence sin is the primal cause of servitude. Men chose the service of sin. Now they suffer the penal servitude which is its consequence. Being penal, and working reformation of character, let those under the yoke bear it patiently².

¹ Lib. xix. cap. 14.

² Lib. xxii. cap. 30 'Nulli superiori inferior invidet,' &c.

³ See below, p. 105.

Now it is noticeable that, in the Utopia, the slaves are not people of any subject race; not even those taken in war, excepting such as have been made prisoners in an actual encounter. 'The slaves among them are only such as are condemned to that state of life for the commission of some crime, or, which is more common, such as their merchants find condemned to die in those parts to which they trade; whom they sometimes redeem at low rates, and in other places have them for nothing³.' They are thus taken into Utopia from motives of humanity; or, at least, their example is used to show that a humane policy is also the most profitable. In the first Book, where Hythloday is made to relate the customs of the Polylerites (Utopians under another name), the subject of slaves is treated at considerable length. And when we read how that 'every year divers of them be restored to their freedom, through the commendation of their patience,' we find More combining Augustine's theory of bondage, as the proper punishment of sin, with the most modern theories as to the alleviation of penal servitude. He may be looked on as the first suggester of the 'ticket of leave.'

To the Republic of Plato More's indebtedness is obvious and avowed. That 'ancient and sage philosopher' is the one whom Hythloday had copied in his observant voyagings. The judgement of Plato on 'weal publics' is more than once quoted. But the Utopia is by no means a mere copy of the Republic.

The second, though later, title of Plato's dialogue is 'concerning Justice.' In the endeavour to discover what justice

¹ Rom. vi. 16.

² De Civit. Lib. xix. cap. 15.

³ Burnet's Translation, ed. 1753,

p. 112.

is, the object under scrutiny is magnified, so to speak. A civil polity so far corresponds to a living human organization, that the constitution and working of the one will illustrate those of the other. They will do more. So close is the analogy, that for the purposes of the inquiry, the commonwealth may be safely regarded as a vaster man. In it, then, as in an enlarged shadow cast upon the canvas, we may see that which, in the smaller organism, our eyes could not discern. To have its perfect form, a state must possess three classes of citizens: rulers, guardians, and producers. The two former are two divisions of one great class, answering to the rational and courageous elements in the human soul. The third is of a lower order, and answers to the concupiscent element. It may possess property, and may live its life in its own way. But the rulers who have to control, and the guards who have to defend, the common state, must be carefully and laboriously trained. No study, no preparation, is too great for them. Their wives must be such among the women as are fitted by mental and bodily qualifications for propagating the lofty race. That being the only object, no private attachments, no permanent unions, must be allowed. The children born to them must be separated from their parents, and brought up as the children of the state. 'In this way, and only in this way, is it possible for the rulers and guardians to lose all sense of private property, and thus become conscious of a perfect unity of interest¹.' To bring about this state of harmony, the supreme power must, by some means, be vested in philosophers. Only when that is achieved will the members work together in proper subordination. And only then will the lineaments of justice be discerned. We shall then recognize her as that which defines the office each member has to fulfil, and which teaches him to fulfil it without encroaching on that of his neighbour.

It is obvious to any reader that Plato adopted many things from the institutions of the Spartans. Their public meals, their discarding the use of the precious metals for money, the garrison life led by their men, the hardy, gymnastic training of their women, the severe discipline of their children, are familiar topics, which reappear in the *Republic*¹. Nowhere else was the subjection of the individual to the state so completely realized. Nowhere else did the machinery employed work so efficiently for the production of that which it was intended to produce—the fighting man, or soldier. Plato tempers this, in his ideal state, by an admixture of Athenian freedom, of wisdom and philosophy; but still his ideal citizen has very much of the soldier. Music for him is placed under a strict censorship, poetry under a ban. Commerce is a thing beneath him; art, if not jealously guarded, will lead to effeminacy. In Plato's aristocracy the old idea of aristos still survives.

¹ See the Analysis of the Republic, prefixed to Davies and Vaughan's translation, ed. 1892, p. xxi.

To the mind of More, on the other hand, the thought of war was only repulsive. His typical citizens, therefore, were not to be soldiers, splendidly equipped. His Utopia was not to be a camp. Hence, while he borrowed much from Plato, or from Lycurgus—the community of goods, the public meals, to some degree the equality of the sexes—he did so with another end in view. Instead of the training of the body for war (though this, as a collateral object, was not neglected), he set before him the training of the intellect for peace. To this end, instead of the barracks, he established the lecture-hall; instead of the exercises of the palaestra, he had books, and music, and games of mental skill. In particular, while approving, and that not in Utopia only, but in his own family, of the education of women being similar to that of men, he opens to them an avenue, of which Plato in the Republic gives no hint, but for which a precedent was to be found in the religious systems both of Greece and Rome. He admits them to the priesthood. Like their sisters in ancient Sparta, they are trained to martial exercises. Like the Pythian priestess, or the priestesses of Vesta, they administer the rites of the Utopian religion. Very few are so privileged; the number of priests altogether is very few; but still they are eligible with the men.

¹ See the Introduction to Professor Jowett's translation, 1888, p. clxx.

It would be idle to connect this with any approval or disapproval by More of the state of the Christian Church in his own time. It is simply a touch of paganism which he introduces, to illustrate better his own views on the education of women. He was giving his own daughters a learned education. The 'Moricae,' like the 'Bilibaldicae,' soon became known as scholars with whom an Erasmus might correspond. In the Utopia he shadows forth, of course with some humorous exaggeration, the parts such women might come to play in a state. If he could have foreseen the mighty power for good or evil two daughters of his own sovereign, reared on the same mental food as his own Margaret, would come to wield in the state, he might perhaps have stayed his hand¹.

Imitations of the Republic by writers later than More have only a comparatively slight interest for us. But it may be well to notice a few of them, if only to see how far they fall short of his standard.

In 1643 there was published at Utrecht a little volume containing three treatises, in Latin, on ideal commonwealths. These were: the Mundus alter et idem of our countryman, Joseph Hall; the Civitas Solis of Campanella; and the Nova Atlantis of Sir Francis Bacon. Of these we will give a short account, in the order in which they stand.

Joseph Hall, successively bishop of Exeter and Norwich, was born in 1574, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge. In 1597 he published a volume of satires, in English verse, under the title of Virgidemiarum Libri. It was a jest of Plautus to turn Vindemia, 'vintage,' into Virgidemia, 'a harvest of rods'; and so these satires were to be rods for the fool's

¹ It would be an interesting subject of speculation, to try to measure the influence on the history of their country exercised by two ladies of a little later date, but trained by their father as More's children were trained by him:

I mean, the two daughters of Sir Anthony Coke; one of whom became the second wife of Sir William Cecil, and the other the wife of Sir Nicholas Bacon, and mother of Sir Francis Bacon.

back. Little of them is remembered now except a couple of lines from the prologue :

I first adventure; follow me who list,
And be the second English satyrist.

From this we shall not be surprised to find a like tone of satire pervading the Mundus alter et idem, the work we are here concerned with, which appeared in 1607. Visions of an austral continent seem to have flitted across his mind, as they did across that of his great contemporary, Bacon. His voyager sails in quest of it, in the good ship Phantasy, and returns after all his discoveries with the wise man's conclusion that there is nothing new under the sun. He has seen another world; but after all it is but the same as the one he left;—the same weaknesses, and follies, and vices of men.

This, then, is the great distinction between Hall's imaginative structure and that of Plato; that whilst in the Republic we see embodiments of the higher faculties of the human soul: its reason in the Rulers, its spiritedness in the Guardians: in the Mundus we have only localizations of its baser appetites and passions. The terra incognita of Hall is mapped out like a cranium as seen by a phrenologist. Here is the region of acquisitiveness; there the region of gluttony; there of combativeness; and the like. The good qualities alone have no territories to represent them. The chief humour is shown in the proper names; some of which are happily chosen. The first land at which the voyager touches is Crapulia, 'Sick Headache' land, with its two provinces of Pamphagonia (Gluttony) and Yvronia (Drunkenness). Its capital is Ucalegon¹, past which steals softly the lazy river Oysivius; where birds bring the people their food, and where the only exertion called for is that of cooking and eating it. For coin, they exchange birds, at a fixed rate. One starling is worth two sparrows, one fieldfare two starlings, and so on. As to their religion, 'they hate Jove because his thunder turns the wine sour and he spoils chosen for its etymological meaning, οὐκ ἀλέγων, to express this sort of city of Lash, or N Importe.

¹ As Juvenal uses the name of the Trojan chief for his house, so Hall uses it for a city. It is evidently

ripe fruit by raining on it. Their god is Time, who eats everything¹.

The next land visited is Viraginia, the country of the Viragoes. This is really Gynia Nova, in books of geography mistakenly written New Guinea. Of its many provinces the chief is Linguadocia, with Garrula for its capital. Here the lionesses are the painters; and man, the less noble animal, is treated with much the same consideration as women used to be, in the days when Judge More had his jest about the eels in the bag, or Erasmus thought it natural to put mulierum loquacitas as an obvious illustration of the shorter class of proverbs.

The reader will see from this specimen, which it is needless to extend, that the Mundus alter et idem has little in common with the Utopia.

The next piece on the list is of a much more serious character. Its author, Thomas Campanella, was born at Stilo, a village in Calabria, in 1568, and entered the Dominican order. In 1590 he went to Naples for the purpose of publishing some work, the opinions in which were considered heterodox, and got him into trouble with the Inquisition. In 1599 he was arrested on a charge of treason, and is said to have been seven times put to the rack, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. From this he was delivered by the interposition of Pope Urban VIII, and ultimately died in a Dominican monastery in Paris, in 1639. His Civitas Solis was first published in 1623.

The City of the Sun is thrown into the form of a dialogue between a Grand Master of the Knights Hospitallers and a Genoese sea-captain, his guest. This latter is an evident reminiscence of Hythloday. There is a trace, too, of allusion to More in the region assigned to the Solar City. In the Utopia, when Hythloday travelled with his little company from the Castellum, they got after a while to the 'line equinoctial,' where everything was barren and dried up. Only when they had got some distance past it, did they begin to find cities of human habitation. Campanella fixes on this torrid zone for the site of his ideal City. In Taprobane (Ceylon), which prosaic geographers make to be many miles north of the equatorial line, his navigator, who has landed, is led to 'a large plain immediately under the equator.' There stands the City of the Sun, compassed by seven encircling walls, like the orbits of the planets; each wall having depicted on it scenes from the history of mankind, the contemplation of which would be of use for the education of the young. In the centre is the temple, itself like the rest of a circular pattern, with altar and dome. Over the altar are two globes, the celestial and terrestrial. Inside the dome are painted the stars of the firmament. From the top outside hangs a revolving flag, 'marked with figures up to thirty-six; and the priests know what sort of year the different kinds of winds bring, and what will be the changes of weather on land and sea¹.'

¹ See the late Professor Morley's Ideal Commonwealths, 1890, p. 269. A translation is there given of part of

Hall's work, found among the papers of Dr. William King (b. 1663), a kindred spirit.

As it has been remarked, the organization of the city is based on the monastic pattern with which the writer was familiar. 'The great ruler among them is a priest whom they call by the name of Hoh, though we should call him Metaphysicus.' He has three assistant princes. The office of Hoh is conferred on the one who has shown the greatest aptitude for acquiring knowledge. He must understand 'all the mechanical arts, the physical sciences, astrology, and mathematics.' 'Not too much attention is given to the cultivation of languages, as they have a goodly number of interpreters who are grammarians in the state . . . but beyond everything else it is necessary that Hoh should understand metaphysics and theology.'

It is in this way that Campanella would fulfil the aspiration of Plato that philosophers should be kings. His theory of higher education is a remarkable protest, considering the age in which he lived, against the notion that 'he was the most analysis of the work is also given by Professor Jowett, in his Introduction to the Republic, pp. ccxxvi-vii.

¹ See p. 220 of Morley's Ideal Commonwealths before quoted. The translation there given was made by Mr. Thomas W. Halliday. A short

learned who knew most of grammar, or logic, or Aristotle, or any other author¹.' Such an one has 'contemplated nothing but the words of books, and has given his mind with useless result to the consideration of the dead signs of things.' For these reasons they consider that their rulers should have been 'philosophers, historians, politicians, and physicists.'

War is an occupation to which they are much more given than the Utopians. But, as with them, their women are trained in martial exercises. Minute directions are given as to their dress. The hours of work are but four a day; for, 'as every one likes to be industrious,' the labour is quickly dispatched. As with Plato, all things are in common; and they reverence the lives of the Apostles, being told that they practised a community of goods. They hold, moreover, the community of wives and children, as Plato did, and for the same reason. 'They say that all private property is acquired and improved for the reason that each of us by himself has his own home and wife and children².' When the Grand Master brings the same objection to this doctrine of communism that Aristotle brought against Plato, and More against his spokesman, Hythloday, that 'under such circumstances, no one will be willing to labour, while yet he expects others to labour,' the Captain can only reply that the objection is one he cannot answer; but that, in some way, there is such a strong spirit of brotherly love among the citizens that all works well.

Want of space forbids longer extracts. The close imitation of the Republic, in several points, will however have been made sufficiently plain. As More interwove the Platonic theory with that of a peaceful, half learned, half industrial, community, so Campanella wove across the same warp the web of educational reform, and of a purified life of the cloister. At the public meals, with him, as with More, 'on one side sit the women, on the other the men; and as in the refectories of the monks, there is no noise. While they are eating, a young man reads a book from a platform, intoning distinctly and sonorously.'

¹ Halliday's translation, as above,
p. 229.

² Ib. p. 225. Comp. De Republica,
bk. v. § 464.

With much that is whimsical, there is much that is of value in Campanella's romance. He felt strongly the necessity of training the mind on a knowledge of facts, and not of mere words only, of mitigating the labour of the working classes, of keeping the race from degenerating by undesirable unions. That a Dominican monk should have written as he did in the first quarter of the seventeenth century, is remarkable. Still more remarkable is it that reforms should have been suggested so temperately by one whose best years were spent in unjust imprisonment.

The New Atlantis of Bacon is but a fragment. According to his biographer, Dr. Rawley, 'his lordship thought also in this present fable to have composed a frame of laws, or of the best state or mould of a commonwealth; but, foreseeing it would be a long work, his desire of collecting the natural history diverted him, which he preferred many degrees before it.' What we possess is therefore but one wing, so to speak, of an extensive building. It was designed to be 'a model or description of a college, instituted for the interpreting of nature, and the producing of great and marvellous works for the benefit of men, under the name of Solomon's House, or the College of the six days' works¹.' Though this short piece was not published till 1629, three years after its author's death, the subject was one which had long occupied his mind. When, in 1611, Thomas Sutton died, leaving his munificent endowment of the Charterhouse, Bacon tendered his advice to the king on the form which the endowment should take. He grudged that it should be made into a mere hospital for the poor. As for grammar schools, 'there are already too many, and therefore no providence to add where there is excess.' What 'Mr. Sutton meant for teachers of children' he would have the king devote to 'teachers of men.' And he ends by indicating a threefold scheme for the application of the bequest, of which the first part was to provide 'a college for controversies,' and the second

¹ See Rawley's Preface in vol. iii. of Bacon's Works, ed. 1730, p. 235.

'a receipt' ('for I like not the word "seminary"') for converts from Spain, Italy, and other foreign countries, to the reformed faith¹.

The experiment of a College of Polemical Divinity was tried, about the time when Bacon wrote, by the foundation of King James's College at Chelsea. This did not long survive its founder. But we may now discern better what had been in Bacon's thoughts, and how his romance of Solomon's House may have been connected with these designs of the 'English Solomon,' as part of a wider scheme of politics as well as education.

The New Atlantis opens abruptly. A company of voyagers, fifty-one in number, sail from Peru, for China and Japan, by the South Sea. We see again the instinctive belief that a southern continent existed. Atlantis had been realized in America. The New Atlantis was to be—as it afterwards proved—an Austral land. After long buffeting by storms, they reach a land 'flat to our sight, and full of boscaage.' After an hour and a half's sail they enter a good haven, 'being the port of a fair city,' and are there hospitably received. The island is Bensalem, the people are Christians, and the chief glory of the place is the Society of Solomon's House, 'which house, or college, is the very eye of this kingdom.' The king who founded it was Salomona, who reigned 'about one thousand nine hundred years ago².' But as for the name, the writer inclines to think that 'our king, finding himself to symbolize in many things with the King of the Hebrews, honoured him with the title of this foundation.'

Hence its other appellation of the College of the Six Days Works; for it was to investigate 'the true nature of all things' created, 'whereby God might have the more glory in the workmanship of them, and men the more fruit in the use of them.' In keeping with this, the visitors are informed that

¹ Works, ib. vol. iv. p. 412.

² As More made Utopus to have lived 1760 years before the scene of his romance opens, and as Bacon wrote a century later, it would almost seem as if in this date there was a designed allusion to the Utopia.

some parts of Solomon's works are still preserved in Bensalem, which had been lost to the rest of the world: 'namely, that natural history which he wrote of all plants, from the cedar of Lebanon to the moss that groweth out of the wall, and of all things that have life and motion.'

Without entering into more details, it seems clear that what Bacon wished most to promote, in his theory of education, was the study of Natural Science. What projects he would have struck out, if he had finished his design, and made a political as well as educational Utopia, we can only conjecture. His treatment of this section, it must be admitted, is a little stiff and pedantic. In one place he evidently refers, though not by name, to his great predecessor. This is where his speaker finds fault with More's device for preventing disappointment after marriage, and proposes another in its stead.

It does not seem worth while to pursue this analysis further. As we approach modern times, the field widens so immensely, that it would be impossible even to recount the names of those who have taken a lead in advocating socialist theories. In the 380 years that have passed since More wrote, the difficulties of the problem that occupied him have become, through the growth of population, at once more complex and more pressing. Some of the revolutionary forces, which he discerned to be even then in motion, have since that time gathered, and burst, and spent themselves; or at least transfused their energy into other movements. He saw the end of feudalism, the disbanding of the retainers of feudal lords, the clearing away of cottagers, that great sheep-farms, reminding us of the old latifundia, might bring in increased revenues. He saw the middle class rising into power, and the poor made still poorer by the dissolution of the religious houses.

Later generations have seen the influence of the middle class reach its height, and in turn begin to decline; while the vast body of wage-earners, now strong by combination as well as numbers, is pressing forward to take their place. Meantime changes have taken place in the implements and modes of labour analogous to those which have arisen in the social and political condition of the labourer. The weaver working at his own loom in his own cottage, or his wife spinning at her own wheel, gave place first to the master employing as many workers as his dwelling would accommodate ; and these in turn disappeared to make room for the factory, with its hundred-handed machines. And if in the political world, with its gradual change from absolutism to democracy, what are called the lower classes seem threatening to swamp the higher, they are themselves exposed to a like fate, as workers, from the very machinery they employ. No one can stand long hours each day tending a machine, or more probably some single part of a machine, without becoming dwarfed and stunted in his faculties as a man. Unlike the old weaver at his loom, he can have no interest in the machine he tends. The raw material it works upon has not been procured by any effort of his ; he has no hand in the disposal of it when finished. He receives the wages necessary to ensure his working there regularly, just as the machine receives its share of the steam or other motive power. If any alleviations of another kind fall to his lot, they come, not from the strict conditions of business, but from motives exterior to business, in the employer or in fellow-workers.

That discontent should arise among those whose lives are spent under such conditions is but natural. More had the discernment to perceive that, for men to remain happy and contented, they must have periodical change of occupation. And so in Utopia the dwellers in towns spend some time in rotation in agricultural labour. If any way could be found for such alternation in the crowded towns of our own day, who can doubt that it would be a blessing—a blessing not to one side only? The sedentary student would be the better, physically and mentally, for working some time as a farm-labourer¹; the ditcher and delver, whose hands have grown horny with the spade and mattock, would have a chance of saving one-half of his nature from death by atrophy, if he could pass for a little while to a life of comparative leisure; the loutish boy, if taken possession of for public gymnastic training, during the hours when he would otherwise be hanging about the streets, might grow up into a soldier-like man, possessed of qualities which, if we had an army of such like, would make it a backbone of strength to the nation.

¹ See, for an illustration of this, the Life of the Rev. Samuel Lewis, by Mrs. Lewis, 1892.

That attempts made to bring about results of this kind should have failed, from time to time, is less to be wondered at than regretted. The societies of Robert Owen, the phalansteries of Fourier, the ateliers nationaux, which travestied rather than carried out the ideas of Louis Blanc, have all had their trial and failed. Selfishness, and the timidity begotten of selfishness, in those who opposed, and want of purity of motive in many of those who advocated, such schemes, have alike contributed to their failure. Above all, the appeal to violence, or the fear of it, has closed the ranks of those who might otherwise have been disposed to give new theories a trial. More, like Budé and Colet, had much to say in favour of an abstract communism. But if any one had tried to put into practice the maxim of Proudhon¹, 'la propriété c'est le vol,' he would have found scant indulgence if brought before Sir Thomas on the bench. So far as effecting any great or sudden changes in society at large was concerned, the Utopia was a failure. During the author's lifetime it remained, as it began, simply a philosophical romance. But its value should not, on that account, be now described as 'rather historic than prophetic,' or the author himself as 'the last of the old rather than the first of the new².' Its influence has sunk deep into the minds of many generations.

In his own practice, in the patriarchal life led under his rule by the combined households at Chelsea, we seem to see an approximation to the solution of the problem. There every one was busy, every one was happy. The servants varied their menial labour by cultivating allotments of garden ground, and, if they had any capacity for it, by the study of music. The daughters of the family were trained in learned pursuits as well as the sons; the Moricæ became as famous as the Bilibaldicæ. Works of charity were the delight of all. In the diffusion of such a spirit of Christian brotherhood as this we may hope to see a remedy for some of the crying evils of our time. A plutocracy, grasping far more than its share of the good things of this life; an unbridled competition in business, where the race is too keen for the weaker followers to get their due; the determination to amass a fortune at all costs, quocunque modo rem, till in the effort even our quiet country glades, and the national monuments of the capital, are made vehicles for advertisements of wares:—these things, which are our disgrace, may indeed be abolished by nihilism and anarchy. But those forces, however they might succeed in producing chaos, have no power to bring light and order out of it again. ‘There is nothing that conquers evil,’ said Colet¹, ‘but good’; and Colet’s Master had said the same before him.

¹ According to Woolsey, the saying should really be ascribed to Brissot de Warville, in 1782. See his Communism and Socialism, 1879, p. 102.

² See the Foreword by Mr. William Morris to his edition of the Utopia; 1893, p. iii.

§ 5.—EARLY EDITIONS OF THE UTOPIA.

The first edition of the Utopia, in Latin, was printed by Thierry Martin, at Louvain, towards the end of 1516. The work of printing appears to have been very expeditious. On Nov. 12, Gerhard of Nimeguen writes to Erasmus that Martin will undertake the task². A week later, we hear of the work being in the printer’s hands³. By February 24, 1516-17, the book is out; as Erasmus, in a letter to Cope, begs him to send for a copy⁴. Its title-page is as follows:—

¹ Lectures on Romans, 1873, p. 86.

² Brewer: Letters and Papers, ii. no. 2540.

³ Ib. no. 2558.

⁴ Ib. no. 2962. These references are collected by Prof. Arber in the bibliographical Introduction to his reprint of the Utopia.

Libellus vere Aureus nec

MINUS SALUTARIS QUAM FESTI-

uus de optimo reip. statu, deq; noua Insula Vtopia

authore clarissimo viro Thoma Moro inclytæ ciuitatis Londinensis ciue & vicecomiti cura M. Petri Aegidii Antuerpiësis, & arte

Theodorici Martini Alustensis, Ty

pographi almæ Louaniensium

Academiæ nunc primum

accuratissime edi

tus. . . .

Cum Gratia z Priuilegio.

The book is in small 4to, 36 lines to a page. There is no pagination. The first four leaves and the last two have no signatures. The rest are numbered a 1, a 2, &c., to m iv. The printed surface measures a little more than $6\frac{3}{4}$ inches by $3\frac{1}{2}$. On the reverse of the title is a rough woodcut sketch of Utopia, headed VTOPIAE INSVLAE FIGURA, representing a tract of land, shaped like a horse-shoe, the opening being at the bottom, washed on all sides by the sea. In the middle of the entrance a fort is erected, off which lies a ship. A river follows the inner line of the curve, its source on the left being labelled fons andri, and its mouth on the right ostium andri. Temples, or public buildings, are dotted about at intervals, on the highest of which is the inscription civitas amabrotû.

The second leaf has on the obverse the Utopian alphabet, represented below, with the Tetrastichon Vernacula Utopiensium lingua, and on the reverse the Hexastichon Anemolii. On the third leaf begins the letter of Peter Giles to Busleyden, dated Nov. 1, 1516, 'Superioribus hisce diebus,' etc., ending on the obverse of leaf 4. On the same page begins the letter of Joannes Paludanus Cassiletensis¹ to Peter Giles, 'Utopiam Mori tui,' etc., followed by a set of ten elegiac verses by the same writer, ending on the fifth leaf (the first with signature, a 1). Then follow the Latin verses of Gerhard and Cornelius Grapheus, the letter of Busleyden to More, and More's prefatory letter to Peter Giles. This preliminary matter ends on the reverse of a iv. The SERMO RAPHAELIS begins on b 1, and ends on the reverse of e iii. On the same page begins the second book, ending on what would be, if signed, m vi; on the back of which leaf is the printer's device, two leopards with human faces, holding between them a shield with the monogram of Thierry Martin. The printing, which is in Roman letter, is close and unattractive to the eye, and full of contractions. The marginal notes are in black letter.

What was meant by the author to be a revised and corrected edition, was entrusted to the care of Froben, to be printed at Basle, and did in fact appear there, in two issues, dated March and November, 1518. But before that edition, of which we will speak more fully presently, was brought out, there appeared one from the press of Gilles de Gourmont at Paris, about the end of 1517, which, as being actually the second in point of time, must take the precedence. Its title is :—

¹ Joannes Paludanus (Van der Broeck) was a professor of rhetoric in the University of Louvain, an intimate friend of both Erasmus and Martin Dorp. It has been thought that the epitaph on the Bishop of Cambrai, included among the printed works of Erasmus, iii. 287 (Leyden edition), is his. The omission of Paludanus's letter and verses from the edition of 1518 was due to the judgement of Erasmus, or perhaps of Beatus

Rhenanus. 'De Utopia rem tuo permitto iudicio,' writes Erasmus to his friend, Dec. 6, 1517; 'Paludanica posunt omitti.'—See p. 99 of the Briefwechsel des Beatus Rhenanus, by Horawitz and Hartfelder, 1886. The compositions have little intrinsic merit; the verses especially being rhetorical, not poetical; such as might be expected from an 'academiac [Lovaniensis] rhctor.'

Ad lectorem.

HABES CANDIDE LECTOR
opusculum illud vere aureū Thomæ Mori nõ min⁹ vtile q̄ elegās de opti-mo reipublicę statu, deq; noua Insula Vtopia, iam iterū, sed multo correcti⁹
q̄ pri⁹, hac Enchiridij forma vt vides multoꝛ tū senatorū tū aliorū grauissimorū viroꝛ suasu æditū. quod sane ti-bi ꝑdiscēdum nõ modo in manib⁹ quo-tidie habendū cēseo. Cui quidē ab innumeris mēdis vndequaꝛ pur-gatio¹ ꝑpter Erasmi annotatiōes ac Budaei eꝑlam : virorū sane qui hoc sæculo nostro extra omnē ingenij aleam positi sunt : addita est etiā ipsius Mori eꝑla eru-ditissima Vale.

+

¶ Cum gratia & priuilegio.

This little book is in small 8vo, the measurement of the printed surface being 4 by 2½ inches². It is in Roman letter, ¹ It is amusing that there should be this slip (for purgato) in the very word in which credit is claimed for the elimination of errors.

² A fine copy, in the original stamped leather binding, is in the Library of St. John's College, Cambridge. Another, said to have been Henry VIII's own copy, is in the British Museum, formerly marked 714 a 26, but now C 65 e 1. In the old Catalogue it is assigned conjecturally to 1520. But I can detect no difference between it and the previous ones of 1517. In the wrong numbering of the last three leaves, the broken pagination of the 25 lines to a page. In spite of its profession of being 'multo correctius editum,' it has a long list of errata at the end, and the execution generally shows signs of haste. The following is the collation: Leaf A i, title, as above; on the reverse, the Hexastichon Anemolii. On A ij begins the long letter of Budé, ending on A vij vers., with the date 'pridie calend. Aug.' [1517]. Then follows the letter of Peter Giles to Busleyden (A viij to B ij); the letter and verses of Paludanus (B ij vers. to B iiij), and More's letter to Peter Giles (B iiij vers. to B viij). On leaf C i (from which point onwards the leaves are paged as well as signed) begins the Utopia, ending on Q iij. On Q iij vers. comes a second letter of More to Peter Giles, now first printed, 'Impendio me, charissime Petre,' etc., ending on Q v vers. On Q vi is the letter of Busleyden to More, dated Mechliniae, M.D.XVI, which ends on R i, followed by the verses of Gerardus Noviomagus and Cornelius Grapheus. After these, on R i vers. comes 'Sermonis pomeridiani Raphaelis . . . finis.' A page and a half of errata extend to the bottom of R ij, and on the back is the fine printer's device of Gilles de Gourmont. No date is added. We are enabled to refer the book to the end of 1517, or the beginning of 1518, because Erasmus, in a letter to More dated March 5, 1517-8¹, speaks of having seen a French edition of the Utopia, which must be this.

The additional matter in this edition consists of the letter of Budé, and the second letter of More to Peter Giles. From the wording of the title it might appear that the marginal notes of Erasmus were now first appended. But nothing of this kind appears here which was not in the previous edition of 1516. The additions just described were included in that of 1518, and are reprinted below.

What More himself thought of Lupset's proceeding, in getting this printed in Paris, we have no evidence to show. It would seem that Budé, with his usual impetuosity, had urged on the young English scholar, then staying in the French capital, to last leaf but one, and other particulars, they seem to be identical.

¹ Brewer: Letters and Papers, vol. ii. no. 3991.

get printed a smaller and more handy edition ('Enchiridii forma'), which might serve to popularize a work he thought so useful to the men of his time. Probably also he and other admirers of the Utopia were impatient at Froben's delay in reprinting it as Basle¹. This delay can be in some measure explained.

There is in the Grenville Library of the British Museum a volume (No. 2398), in binding probably contemporary, which contains (1) the Utopia, ending with Froben's device on p. 165²; (2) Querela Pacis . . . autore Erasmo Roterodamo, with the Declamatio de Morte, and some other short pieces of Erasmus; and (3) Epigrammata Thomae Mori Britanni, which begins, on the reverse of the title, with p. 166, thus being plainly meant to continue on with (1). On the last page of (3) is the date: 'mense martio, 1518.' A note by Froben on p. 643 of the Querela Pacis accounts for this dislocation. He meant, he said, to have issued together all the treatises just described. But finding that they would make too bulky a volume, he had resolved to publish the Utopia and Epigrammata together as soon as possible, 'nitidissime et quamprimum'; the Querela Pacis and the other tracts of Erasmus being already out of the press. The date of this letter is 'postridie Nonas Decembris (Dec. 6), M.D.XVII.' The imprint on the Querela is also 'Mense Decembri, 1517.'

It thus appears that, had not Froben lost time by attempting to include too much in one volume, and by thus having to change his plans, the Utopia would have been printed at Basle before the end of 1517, and this would have been the second edition. As things were, it was delayed till March of the following year; and thus, while in the author's intention the second edition, it is in point of actual time the third.

¹ Erasmus, writing to Beatus Rhenanus, Dec. 6, 1517, says: 'De Mori Utopia et Epigrammatis, res mihi magis erat cordi quam mea ipsius negotia: id cum tantopere ab eis efflagitarim, tamen nescio quo pacto video cessatum.' Op. iii. 1646. The printers made the long additional letter of Budé an excuse. See Brewer: Letters, &c. ii. no. 3991.

² The last numbered page is 164; then comes one unpagged leaf, on the back of which is the printer's device.

Of this edition of 1518 there were two issues, one in March, the other in November. The copy in the Basle Library, formerly belonging to some of the Amerbach family, bears date 'Mense Novembri.' But that from which the ensuing reprint has been made, is 'Mense Martio.' I add a brief collation of this, though its contents will be seen from what follows¹.

On the reverse of the title, given below², is the letter of Erasmus to Froben, 'Cum antehac,' etc.; on leaf a 2 (paged 3) is Budé's letter to Lupset, ending on p. 10; on p. 11 is 'Hexastichon Anemolii; p. 12 the woodcut of Utopia; p. 13 the Utopian alphabet; p. 14 the letter of Peter Giles to Busleyden, ending p. 16; p. 17 the letter of More to Peter Giles, 'Pudet me,' etc., ending on p. 24; p. 25 begins the 'Sermo,' headed by a woodcut drawing of the friends conversing in the garden at Antwerp, and ending on p. 163; on the same page begins the letter of Busleyden to More, 'Non sat fuit,' etc., ending on the obverse of the unpagged leaf (165), followed by the verses of Gerhard and Cornelius Grapheus; and on the reverse of this leaf the imprint before described.

As compared with the first edition (1516), it will be observed that this omits the letter and verses of Paludanus³; while as compared with the French edition (1517?) it leaves out the second letter of More to Peter Giles, 'Impendio me,' etc. In typographical execution it is much superior to its predecessors. The Roman letter is used throughout. The size is small 4to, the printed surface being $5\frac{3}{4}$ by $3\frac{7}{8}$ inches. The woodcut of Utopia is better engraved, and has more details introduced. In the foreground three figures are brought in, to represent Hythloday, More himself, and (probably) Peter Giles. The ill part by Paludanus. Erasmus, writing to Botzheim in 1524, refers to him as 'hospes meus,' and calls him 'vir, si quis alius, exacto iudicio.' Still, it must have seemed a little unkind, especially as it was to Paludanus (whose lectures he had attended at Louvain) that Listrius dedicated his commentary on the Moriæ Encomium of Erasmus.

¹ I quote from a copy kindly lent me by Mr. Seebohm. The division of the words in the imprint of the November issue is slightly different: 'Basileae apvd Ioannem | Frobenivm mense Novembri | M. D. XVIII.'

² See the facsimile facing p. lxxvi.

³ See the note above, p. lxvi. The omission of his complimentary tribute does not seem to have been taken in

drawing of the garden at Antwerp represents four figures; 'Io. Clemens' (John Clement, tutor to More's children) making the fourth with the preceding three.

A very brief notice of some later editions must suffice. In 1519 the Utopia was issued from the Juntine press at Venice, in 8vo, as an appendix to Opuscula Erasmo roterodamo interprete. An edition appeared at Louvain, in the italic letter, in 8vo, in 1548, and one at Cologne, 8vo, 1555. In 1563 the Utopia was included in the Lucubrationes published by Episcopius at Basle; and in 1565 and 1566 in the Opera at Louvain. In 1591 there appeared a small edition 'ex officina Cratoniana' at Wittenberg.

It is not necessary to go beyond the end of the century¹. That no edition should have been published in English during the author's lifetime, and that no English translation of it should have been made till 1551, would be thought strange, if we did not consider the political circumstances of the time.

§ 6.—RALPH ROBYNSON, AND THE ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS.

Our debt to Robynson is so great, for having been the first to translate the Utopia into English, that he seems to deserve something more than a passing mention.

Ralph Robynson, a Lincolnshire man, was born in 1521, the son of poor parents who had a large family. He was educated at Grantham and Stamford grammar schools², and was thus a schoolfellow of William Cecil, afterwards Lord Burghley. On the acquaintance or friendship thus formed he based a claim to consideration, in more than one urgent petition to the great Secretary later on in life. Being the only one of his family destined for a learned profession, he entered Corpus Christi College, Oxford, in 1536, at the age of 15³. He took his B.A.

¹ Besides those named, Mr. Sidney Lee, in the article before quoted, cites an edition at Basle, 1520, in 4to, which I have not been able to trace.

² 'Cum Robynsonum Granthamiensem Stamfordiensemque noueris in literis educatum.'—Letter to Cecil, Lansdowne MSS., vol. ii. no. 59.

³ Wood's Fasti (Bliss), pt. i. col. 111, n. See also Boase's Register, i. p. 199.

in 1540, was made Fellow of his College, June 16, 1542, and in March, 1544, supplicated for his M.A., but whether he proceeded is not certain. He afterwards obtained the livery of the Goldsmith's Company¹, and received some appointment as clerk in Cecil's service. This he sought to have assured to him by letters patent, and also to have the stipend attached to it increased.

There are preserved among the Lansdowne MSS.² two letters and a copy of elegiac verses, all in Latin, addressed at various times by Robynson to his patron, from which we learn several particulars of his life, and of his struggles for a subsistence. In the first of these letters, endorsed May, 1551, he speaks of both his parents as still living, and needing help from him. He had moreover been lately saddled with the maintenance of two brothers, and had in consequence to run into debt. In the verses, endorsed 'his New Year's gift,' written apparently before 1571 (as he does not yet address his patron as Baron of Burghley), he speaks of the burden of advancing years, and hints at having been serviceable to Cecil in their school-days:—

'Si bene quid de te merui puerilibus annis, Quolibet officio si tibi gratus eram;
Id mihi pauperie nunc atque senilibus annis Oppresso prosit, vir venerande, precor.'

There is something pathetic, and at the same time humiliating, in these repeated applications. It does not appear that either they, or the dedication of the Utopia in 1551, produced much effect; as the last letter, which is addressed to Cecil as Lord High Treasurer, and therefore was not written before July, 1572, is drily endorsed: 'Rodolphus Robynsonus. For some place to relieve his poverty.' In what year Robynson died, I have not been able to discover. He must not be confused with a Ralph Robinson, of Lincoln College, Oxford, who was B.A. in 1609, nor with a Cambridge man of the same name, but

¹ Strype: Ecl. Mem., ed. 1822, ii. pt. i. p. 548.

² Vol. ii. nos. 57-59. The style is pretentious, as Robynson naturally wishes to show off his Latinity to Cecil, and quotations from Greek and Latin authors are unsparingly introduced.

of a still later date, who was minister of St. Mary Woolnoth, London, and died in 1655¹.

Robynson's style as a translator has undoubted merits. It is idiomatic and picturesque. In many points it illustrates, and is illustrated by, the English of the Book of Common Prayer, which, in its earlier form, had appeared only two years before the Utopia. Its chief fault is redundancy, or rather a constant effort to express the sense of the Latin by an accumulation of partial equivalents. We are reminded, in reading it, of the Prayer for the Queen's Majesty, with its 'health and wealth,' 'vanquish and overcome,' 'joy and felicity.' Thus the single word instat, in the Latin, becomes with Robynson 'draweth neare and is at hand'; seruanda, 'to be fulfilled, obserued and kept.' Armis is rendered 'their armour or harneis whiche they weare'; while auguria, in one place², has for its equivalent a whole sentence. Nor is this characteristic feature subdued in the later edition. On the contrary, the striving to attain greater accuracy now and then leads to a yet more dictionary-like definition, instead of a translation. Thus sine omni prorsus hostimento, which in the first edition is 'without anny e gage or pledge,' appears in the second as 'without any gage, paawne or pledge.'

The first edition of Robynson's translation was published by Abraham Vele³, at the sign of the Lambe in St. Paul's Churchyard, 1551. It is in black letter, small 8vo size, the

¹ Wood's Fasti (Bliss), pt. i. col. 334. See also the Preface to Christ the All and in All, by Ralph Robynson, 1656. Dr. Lumby, p. 184, identifies our Ralph Robynson with one who translated Leland's Ancient Order . . . of Prince Arthur; but that is a mistake. The translator of Leland was a Richard Robynson, citizen of London, who in 1583 put forth in 4to 'The Auncient Order, Society and Unitie laudable of Prince Arthure,' &c., translated and collected by himself, under the initials R.R. He had, in 1576, published a treatise of 'A moral Methode of Ciuille Policie,' abridged from Patricius, Bishop of Gaeta. Hence perhaps the confusion. There is a full account of him in Watt's Bibliotheca; and Sir S. E. Brydges in The British Bibliographer, vol. i. p. 109, art. iii, distinctly speaks of him as Richard Robynson. He was a voluminous writer.

² P. 279.

³ An account of Abraham Vele, or Veale, with a long list of works published by him, will be found in Watt's Bibliotheca. He was a Draper and Stationer.

height of the page being about $5\frac{3}{4}$ inches, the breadth $3\frac{1}{2}$ ¹. It has no marginal summaries, as the second edition has. It contains 142 leaves, unpagcd.

The Epistle 'To the right honourable, and his verie singuler good maister, maister William Cecylle esquiere,' occupies leaves ✠ ii-vi. On the reverse of ✠ vi begins the Letter of More to Peter Giles, ending on A iv. The reverse of this last leaf is blank. 'The fyrste Boke' begins on B i, and ends on G iv vers. The second begins on G v and ends on S iv. No translation of verses, or any other matter, is added.

The second edition, of 1556, resembles the first in size and style of printing, being also in black letter, but has six leaves fewer. The leaves, excepting the last five, are pagcd as well as signed. The most noticeable change in the contents is the omission of the dedicatory letter to Cecil².

After the title comes an address of the Translator to the gentle Reader (a ij-a iij vers.); then the letter of More to Giles (a iij-B i vers.); the first book (B ij-K iii); the second book (K iij vers.-S iij vers.); Giles' Letter to Buslyde (S iij-S vi); 'A meter of iij verses' and others (S vj vers.-S vij vers.); the address of the Printer to the Reader, explaining why no reproduction of the Utopian alphabet is given (S viij), with the imprint below. The last page of all is blank.

The third edition of Robynson's translation was printed by Thomas Creede, London, 1597, in small 4to. Signatures to T iv. The body of the work is still in black letter, but the preface in Roman.

The fourth was by Bernard Alsop, at the sign of the Dolphin in Distaff Lane, London, 1624, in small 4to, pp. 138, besides eight at the beginning and six at the end not pagcd. It is dedicated by Alsop to 'the honourable descended Gentleman, Cresacre More, of More-Place in North-Mimes, in the Countie of Hereford, Esquire; next in Bloud to Sir Thomas More . . .,' and

¹ The copy from which this description is taken is in the Grenville Library of the British Museum, marked G.2288.

² Are we to infer that by 1556

Robynson had grown weary of court-ing Cecil's favour? If so, he made another attempt, as we have seen above, in 1572 or soon after.

professes to be 'now after many Impressions, newly Corrected and purged of all Errors hapned in the former Editions.'

The work has been often reprinted since; notably by Dibdin¹, 'with copious notes and a Biographical and Literary Introduction,' London, 1808, 4to (edited afresh, and printed in a handsome style by Robert Roberts, Boston, 1887, 8vo, with facsimiles and notes); by Professor Arber in his 'English Reprints,' 1869, and Professor Lumby, at the Pitt Press, in 1879; and, quite recently by Mr. William Morris, at the Kelmscott Press, in 1893. This last is a sumptuously printed book, in black letter type, with rubricated marginal notes; pp. i-xiv, 1-283, size 9 inches by 5. The text is revised by F. S. Ellis, on the basis of the second edition. It has a 'Foreword' of six pages by Mr. Morris.

Until 1684 Robynson's was the only English translation of the Utopia. But in that year, Gilbert Burnet, Bishop of Salisbury, published a new version. His motives for undertaking the work, as he tells us, were want of diversion and the having on his hands too much leisure. Accordingly, he thought it 'no unkind nor ill Entertainment to the Nation' to give it the 'fine and well-digested Notions' of 'one of the greatest Men that this Island has produced.' His opinion of the older translation is curious: 'It was once translated into English not long after it was written; and I was once apt to think it might have been done by Sir Thomas More himself: For as it is in the English of his Age, and not unlike his Style; so the Translator has taken a Liberty that seems too great for any but the Author

¹ Dibdin professed to reproduce the text of the first edition:—'The text of the present edition is taken from the first English one, which was translated by Raphe Robynson, and printed by Abraham Vele, in 1551' (The Epistle to the Reader). But later on (p. clxxx), he finds it 'proper to observe, that the text of the present edition of the Utopia is, in fact, printed from Alsop's edition of 1639; as being the most convenient ancient edition for the com-

positor to execute.' As Alsop's was a gradually modernized form, embodying the alterations of the second and subsequent editions, and with the spelling modified, it may easily be judged how far Dibdin's reprint was from representing accurately the first edition. As the reprints of Arber, Lumby, and Morris all follow the second edition, it is believed that the present is, as was said in the Preface, the only exact reproduction of the first edition yet made.

himself, who is Master of his own Book, and so may leave out or alter his Original as he pleases: Which is more than a Translator ought to do, I am sure it is more than I have presumed to do.'

Bishop Burnet's translation was often reprinted¹. It is undoubtedly closer to the Latin and more correct than Robynson's, but wants the racy English which gives a charm to the older book. The reader will, however, be able to form his own opinion, from specimens given from time to time in the notes.

Another translation was made in 1808 by Arthur Cayly the younger. His work appeared in two vols. 4to, of which the first was occupied by Memoirs of Sir Thomas More, while the second contained the new version of the Utopia, the History of Richard III, and a rendering of some of More's Latin poems. The translation for the most part closely follows Burnet's, and has never been reprinted.

¹ A list of these reprints is given by Professor Arber. The most noticeable of them is that appended by Dr.

F. Warner, in 1758, to his Memoirs of Sir Thomas More.

DE OPTI

MO REIP. STATV DEQVE
noua insula Vtopia libellus ue-re aureus, nec minus salutaris quàm festiuus, clarissimi disertif-simiq; uiri THOMAE MORI inclytæ ciuitatis Londinensis ciuis & Vicecomitis.

EPIGRAMMATA clarissimi
disertissimiq; uiri THOMAE
MORI, pleraq; è Græcis uersa.
EPIGRAMMATA. Des. Erasmi Roterodami.

Apud inclytam Basileam.

LVC RAECLIA TAR QVINVS

ERASMUS OF ROTTERDAM

TO HIS DEAR GOSSIP JOHN FROBEN¹

GREETING.

I have hitherto been pleased beyond measure with all that my friend More has written, but felt some distrust of my own judgment, by reason of the close friendship between us. But now that I see learned men to be all unanimously of my opinion, even outdoing me in the warmth of their admiration for his transcendant genius,—a proof of their greater discernment, though not of their greater affection; I am quite satisfied that

2 ERASMVVS ROTERODAMVVS IOAN

NI FROBENIO COMPATRI SVO

CHARISSIMO S. D.

CVM antehac omnia Mori mei mihi supra modum semper placuerint, tamen ipse meo iudicio nonnihil diffidebam, ob arctissimam inter nos amicitiam. Caeterum ubi uideo doctos uno ore omneis meo subscribere suffragio, ac uehementius etiam diuinum hominis ingenium suspicere, non quod plus ament, sed quod plus

¹ John Froben, the printer, was a native of Hammelburg in Franconia, born in 1460. After studying in the university of Basle, he entered the printing-house of John Amerbach, and in time became himself a printer in that city. Erasmus, many of whose works issued from his press, was an intimate friend, and was godfather to his son John Erasmus, or Erasmusius.

Hence the term compater used in the superscription of this letter. Froben died in 1527. His widow, Gertrud, is mentioned in a letter of Beatus Rhenanus to Boniface Amerbach, dated Aug. 20, 1536. Erasmus's godson was married in that year.—See the Briefwechsel des Beatus Rhenanus, ed. by Horawitz and Hartfelder, 1886, pp. 421, 430; and Erasmi Epist. 922.

I am in the right, and shall not shrink in future from openly expressing what I think. What would not such marvellous natural gifts have accomplished, if his intellect had been trained in Italy; if it were wholly devoted to literature; if it had had time to ripen for its proper harvest, its own autumn? While quite young, he amused himself with composing epigrams, many of them written when he was a mere boy. He has never gone out of his native Britain, save once or twice, when acting as ambassador for his sovereign in the Netherlands¹. He is married, and has the cares of a family; he has the duties of a public office to discharge, and is immersed in the business of the law-courts; with so many important affairs of state distracting him besides, that you would wonder at his having leisure even to think of books.

So I have sent you his Prolusions and Utopia. If you think fit, let them go forth to the world and to posterity with the recommendation of being printed by you. For such is the reputation of your press, that for a book to be known to have been published by Froben, is a passport to the approbation of the learned.

cernant; serio plaudo meae sententiae, nec uerebor posthac quod sentio palam eloqui. Quid tandem non praestitisset admirabilis ista naturae felicitas, si hoc ingenium instituisset Italia? si totum Musarum sacris uacaret, si ad iustam frugem ac uelut autumnum suum maturuisset? Epigrammata lusit adolescens admodum, ac pleraque puer. Britanniam suam nunquam egressus est, nisi semel atque iterum, Principis sui nomine legatione fungens apud Flandros. Praeter rem uxoriam, praeter curas domesticas, praeter publici muneris functionem et causarum undas, tot tantisque regni negociis distrahitur, ut mireris esse ocium uel cogitandi de libris.

Proinde misimus ad te progymnasmata illius, et Vtopiam; ut si uidetur tuis excusa typis orbi posteritatiue commendentur: quando ea est tuae officinae autoritas, ut liber uel hoc nomine placeat eruditus, si cognitum sit e Frobenianis aedibus prodiisse.

¹ This seems to be a mistake on the part of Erasmus. More, in his letter to Dorp, written in 1515, expressly says that, seven years before, he had been in the universities of Paris and Louvain, though not for long—'non diu quidem.' More's second embassy, to Calais, was in the very month in which Erasmus wrote these words.

Farewell, and greet for me your good father-in-law, your charming wife, and the darling children. Mind you bring up in good learning my little godson Erasmus, in whom I have a claim as well as you ; for learning has rocked his cradle.

Louvain :

Aug. 25th, 1517.

Bene uale cum optimo socero, coniuge suauiſſima ac mellitiſſimis liberis. Erasmum filiolum mihi tecum communem, inter literas natum, fac optimis literis inſtituendum cures.

Louanii. viii. Cal. Septemb. An. M.D.XVII.

GUILLAUME BUDÉ²

TO HIS ENGLISH FRIEND THOMAS LUPSET¹

GREETING.

I owe you many thanks, my learned young friend Lupset, for having sent me Thomas More's Utopia, and so drawn my attention to what is very pleasant, and likely to be very profitable, reading.

It is not long ago since you prevailed upon me (your en-

GVILLIELMVS

3

BVDAEVS THOMAE LV-

PSETO ANGLO S.

GRATIAM SANE INGENTEM a nobis iniisti, Lupsete adolescentum doctissime, qui me, porrecta mihi VTOPIA THOMAE MORI, ad iucundissimae simul et usui futurae lectionis intentionem auertisti. Nam cum a me dudum precibus id contendisses, id quod,

¹ Thomas Lupset (? 1498-1530), a scholar whom Colet had educated under William Lily, was at this time in Paris, where he graduated in arts. He was superintending the publication of works by more than one of his friends.—See more in the Introduction, § 5, and, for the scanty details of his life, Cooper's Athenae Cantabrigienses, i. p. 40.

² The name of Guillaume Budé is too well known in the world of letters to need much said about him here. He was born in 1467, and was thus a close contemporary of Erasmus and Colet. He died in 1540. Many characteristics of the man are illustrated in this letter: his vehemence, his aversion from the law (to the profession of which he was originally destined), his fondness for displaying his command of Greek, and the like. He was invited to the court of the French king as urgently as was More to that of the English, and showed the same disinclination to the service; complying only when he believed that the cause of learning would be benefited by his presence at court. At one period of his life, to counteract the effects of too sedentary habits, he devoted himself to active work in building and planting on his two country estates, at Marly and Saint-treaties seconding my own strong inclination) to read the six books of Galen On the preservation of the Health, to which that master of the Greek and Latin tongues, Dr. Thomas Linacre¹, has lately rendered the service—or rather, paid the compliment²—of translating them from the extant originals into Latin. So well has the task been performed, that if all that author's works (which I consider worth all other medical lore put meapte ipse sponte magnopere exoptaturus eram, ut THOMAE LINACRI, medici utraque lingua praestantissimi, libros sex De sanitate tuenda legerem, quos ille ex Galeni monumentis latinitate nuper ita donavit, uel quibus ipse potius latinitatem, ut, si omnia eius auctoris opera (quae ego instar omnis medicinae esse puto) latina tandem fiant, Maur. When so occupied, he loved, says his biographer (in Batesii Vitae, p. 234), in words that will illustrate an expression in his letter, 'cursu corpus fatigare.'

As, besides these country villas, he purchased a house in the Rue Saint-Martin, then accounted the best part of Paris, which he pulled down and rebuilt from top to bottom, and lived in such style there that Vives, the Spanish scholar, when he paid him a visit, 'fut ébloui du train que menait l'illustre helléniste,' it is obvious that his invectives against private property must be taken with some qualification.

How far, or whether at all, Budé was inclined to the principles of the Reformation, has been much disputed. He appears to be very guarded in respect of anything said about doctrine. But in the Epistolae Posteriores he animadverts, as bitterly as Erasmus might have done, upon the obstructiveness of the haters of the new learning. His great treatise De Asse, 1514, was judged by the Spanish Inquisition to require expurgation (Tribbechovius, De Doctoribus Scholasticis, 1719, p. 89); and we can hardly wonder at this, after reading the fierce attack (fol. xci vers.) upon the late pope, Julius II.

It is certain that, after his death, his widow and some of his many children migrated to Geneva, and made profession of the reformed faith. And some not unnaturally thought, as Melanchthon tells us, that this pointed to counsel given in that direction by Budé, before his death.—See Bayle, i. p. 751, note L, and the monograph by M. Rebitté, 1846. p. 147.

¹ Thomas Linacre (? 1460–1524), the founder of the Royal College of Physicians, had for some time been engaged in translating treatises of Galen into Latin. His version of the six books De sanitate tuenda was first printed at Paris by Guillaume Rubé in 1517.—See Johnson's Life of Linacre, 1835, p. 208.

² In the Latin a nice distinction is drawn between the two constructions of donare: donare aliquid alicui, and donare aliquem aliqua re. As Valla points out, the latter has more the notion of supplying a deficiency, or giving a 'consolation prize,' as in the well-known line of Virgil:

Nemo ex hoc numero mihi non donatus abibat.

The former more expresses a voluntary or complimentary gift. See the De linguae Latinae elegantia, 1529, leaf 87 vers.

together) be in time translated, the want of a knowledge of Greek is not likely to be seriously felt by our schools of medicine.

I have hastily skimmed over that work, as it stands in Linacre's papers (for the courteous loan of which, for so long a time, I am very greatly indebted to you) with the result that I deem myself much benefited by the perusal. But I promise myself still greater profit when the book itself, on the publication of which at the presses of this city you are now busily engaged, shall have appeared in print.

While I thought myself already under a sufficient obligation to you on this account, here you have presented to me More's Utopia, as an appendix or supplement to your former kindness. He is a man of the keenest discernment, of a pleasant disposition, well versed in knowledge of the world. I have had the book by me in the country, where my time was taken up with running about and giving directions to workpeople (for you know something, and have heard more, of my having been occupied for more than a twelvemonth on business connected with my country-house); and was so impressed by reading it, as I learnt and studied the manners and customs of the Utopians, that I well-nigh forgot, nay, even abandoned, the management of my family affairs. For I perceived that all the theory and non magnopere tum medicorum schola Graecae linguae cognitionem desideratura uideatur.

Eum librum ex schedis LINACRI tumultuaria lectione ita percurri (quarum mihi usum tantisper a te indultum summi loco beneficii duco), ut ea lectione multum me profecisse existimem; sed ex libri editione quae nunc a te sedulo procuratur in officinis huius urbis, ego maiorem etiam profectum mihi spondeam.

Hoc nomine cum me tibi obstric|tum esse satis crederem, ecce tu 4 mihi, uelut prioris beneficii uel appendicem uel auctarium, VTOPIAM illam MORI donasti, hominis in primis acris, ingenioque amoeno, et in rerum humanarum aestimatione ueteratoris. Eum librum cum ruri in manibus cursitando, satagendo, operis imperitando haberem (partim enim nosti, partim audisti, uillaticis me negociis alterum iam hunc annum multum operae impendisse), usque adeo eius lectione affectus sum, cognitis et perpensis Vtopinorum moribus et institutis, ut paene rei familiaris procuracionem intermiserim atque etiam abiepractice of domestic economy, all care whatever for increasing one's income, was mere waste of time.

And yet, as all see and are aware, the whole race of mankind is goaded on by this very thing, as if some gadfly were bred within them to sting them. The result is that we must needs confess the object of nearly all legal and civil qualification and training to be this: that with jealous and watchful cunning, as each one has a neighbour with whom he is connected by ties of citizenship, or even at times of relationship, he should be ever conveying or abstracting something from him; should pare away, repudiate, squeeze, chouse, chisel, cozen, extort, pillage, purloin, thief, filch, rob¹, and—partly with the connivance, partly with the sanction of the laws—be ever plundering and appropriating.

This goes on all the more in countries where the civil and canon law, as they are called, have greater authority in the two courts. For it is evident that their customs and institutions are pervaded by the principle, that those are to be deemed the high-priests of Law and Equity, who are skilled in caveats—or capiats, rather; men who hawk at their unwary fellow-citizens; artists in formulas, that is, in gudgeon-traps; adepts in con-cerim, cum nugas esse uiderem artem omnem industriamque oeconomicam, omnemque omnino curam census ampliaticem: qua tamen ipsa omne genus mortalium uelut oestro quodam intestino et congenito exagitari, nemo est qui non uideat et intelligat; ut legitimarum (prope dixerim) et ciuiliū artium ac disciplinarum eum esse scopum fateri necesse sit, ut tam liuida quam accurata solertia alter ab altero, quicum ciuilitatis ius ei et interdum gentilitatis intercedit, quippiam semper abducatur, abstrahatur, abradatur, abiuret, exprimat, extundatur, exculpat, extorqueat, excutiat, excudat, subducatur, suffuretur, suppilet, inuolet, legibusque partim conniuentibus partim autoribus, auferat et interuertat.

Id adeo magis in iis gentibus, apud quas iura quae ciuilia et pontificia uocantur amplius in utroque foro ualent; quorum moribus et institutis eam inualuisse opinionem nemo non uidet, ut homines cautionum prudentes, uel captionum potius, et inconsultorum ciuium aucupes, et formularum, id est, excipularum, opifices, ac pactilis iuris cocted law ; getters up of cases ; jurisconsults of a controverted, perverted, inverted jus. These are the only fit persons to give opinions as to what is fair and good ; nay, what is far more, to settle with plenary power what each one is to be allowed to have, and what not to have, and the extent and limit of his tenure. How deluded must public opinion be to have determined matters thus¹ !

¹ If it is impossible to impart elegance to such a string of expletives, I must plead that they are only a close reproduction of the Latin.

The truth is that most of us, blind with the thick rheum of ignorance in our eyes, suppose that each one's cause, as a rule, is just, in proportion to its accordance with the requirements of the law, or to the way in which he has based his claim on the law. Whereas, were we agreed to demand our rights in accordance with the rule of truth, and what the simple Gospel prescribes, the dullest would understand, and the most senseless admit, if we put it to them, that, in the decrees of the canonists, the divine law differs as much from the human ; and, in our civil laws and royal enactments, true equity differs as much from law ; as the principles laid down by Christ, the founder of human society, and the usages of His disciples, callentissimi, et litium concinnatores, iurisque contrauersi peruersi inuersi consulti, antistites esse iusticiae aequitatisque existimentur ; solique digni qui de aequo bonoque responsissent, atque etiam (quod maius est multo) qui cum imperio ac potestate statuant quid unumquemque habere, quid non habere, quatenus quamdiuque liceat ; hallucinantis id utique sensus communis iudicio.

Quippe cum plerique hominum, crassis ignorantiae lemis caecutientes, tam aequissimam fere causam unumquemque putemus habere, quam maxime ius postulat, aut iure subnixus est ; cum, si ad ueritatis normam et ad simplicitatis Euangelicae praescriptum exigere iura uelimus, nemo sit tam stupidus quin intelligat, nemo tam uaecors quin fateatur si urgeas, tam ius et fas hodie ac tamdiu in sanctionibus pontificiis, et ius atque aequum in legibus ciuilibus et principum placitis dissidere, quam CHRISTI, rerum humanarum conditoris, instituta, eiusque discipulorum ritus, ab eorum decretis et placitis, qui differ from the decrees and enactments of those who think the summum bonum and perfection of happiness to lie in the money-bags of a Croesus or a Midas. So that, if you chose to define Justice now-a-days, in the way that early writers liked to do, as the power who assigns to each his due¹, you would either find her non-existent in public, or, if I may use such a comparison, you would have to admit that she was a kind of kitchen stewardess: and this, alike whether you regard the character of our present rulers, or the disposition of fellow-citizens and fellow-countrymen one towards another.

¹ With these denunciations of the law as then administered may be compared the not less severe strictures of Dean Colet in his Exposition of Romans (edited with the Letters to Radulphus, 1876), p. 162 ; and in his Lectures on Corinthians, pp. xviii, 45. Both he and Budé had probably in their minds the language of Cicero, De Oratore, i. 55.

Perhaps indeed it may be argued, that the law I speak of has been derived from that inherent, world-old justice called natural law²; which teaches that the stronger a man is, the more he should possess; and, the more he possesses, the more eminent among his countrymen he ought to be: with the result that now we see it an accepted principle in the Law of Nations, that persons who are unable to help their fellows by any art or practice worth mentioning, if only they are adepts in those complicated knots and stringent bonds, by which men's pro-

Croesi et Midae aceruos bonorum finem esse putant et felicitatis cumulum. Adeo si iusticiam finire nunc uelis, quomodo priscis autoribus placuit, quae ius suum unicuique tribuat, uel nullibi eam in publico inuenias, uel (si dicere id mihi permittam) culinariam quandam dispensatricem esse ut fateamur necesse sit; siue nunc imperitantium mores spectes, siue ciuium inter se et popularium affectus.

Nisi uero a germana mundique aequali iusticia (quod ius naturale uocatur) manasse ius id contenderint, ut quo quisque plus polleat, eo etiam plus habeat; quo autem plus habeat, eo plus eminere inter ciues debeat. Quo fit ut iam iure gentium receptum esse uideamus, ut qui nec arte nec industria memorabili iuuare ciues suos et populares possunt, si modo pactiles illos nexus et contractiles nodos teneant, quois hominum patrimonia obstringuntur, quosque uulgus ignarum hominesque literis humanioribus dediti, ac procul foro,

¹ 'Quae animi affectio, suum cuique tribuens, . . . iusticia dicitur.' Cic. de Fin. v. 23.

² 'The good old rule' of Wordsworth:

'the simple plan,
That they should take, who have the power,
And they should keep, who can.'

perties are tied up (things accounted a mixture of Gordian knots and charlatanry, with nothing very wonderful about them, by the ignorant multitude, and by scholars living, for the sake of recreation or of investigating the truth, at a distance from the Courts),—that these persons, I say, should have an income equal to that of a thousand of their countrymen, nay, even of a whole state; and sometimes more than that; and that they should then be greeted with the honourable titles of wealthy men, thrifty men, makers of splendid fortunes. Such in truth is the age in which we live; such our manners and customs; such our national character. These have pronounced it lawful for a man's credit and influence to be high, in proportion to the way in which he has been the architect of his own fortunes and of those of his heirs: an influence, in fact, which goes on increasing, according as their descendants in turn, to the remotest generation, vie in heaping up with fine additions the property gained by their ancestors; which amounts to saying, according as they have ousted more and more extensively their connections, kindred, and even their blood relations.

But the founder and regulator of all property, Jesus Christ, left among His followers a Pythagorean communion and love; and ratified it by a plain example, when Ananias was condemned to death for breaking this law of communion. By laying down

animi causa aut ueritatis indagandae ergo agentes, partim Gordii uincola esse ducunt, partim circulatoria nec magnopere miranda, ii millenorum ciuium censum, et saepe singularum ciuitatum aut etiam ampliorem habeant; iidemque tum locupletes, tum frugi homines, tum magnifici conquisitores honorifice uocitentur: quippe iis seculis, iis institutis, iis moribus, in iis gentibus, quae id ius esse statuerunt, ut tam summa fide atque autoritate quisque sit, quam maximis opibus penates suos architectatus est ipse haeredesque eius; idque eo magis atque magis, quo eorum adnepotes, horumque rursus abnepotes, patrimonia a maioribus parta luculentis certatim accessionibus cumulauerint; id est, quo longius latiusque confines, affines, cognatos, consanguineos summouerint.

At uero CHRISTVS, possessio num conditor et moderator, Pythagoricam communionem et charitatem inter asseclas suos relictam luculento sanxit exemplo, damnato capitis Anania ob temeratam communionis legem. Quo certe instituto CHRISTVS omne iuris istius this principle, Christ seems to me to have abolished, at any rate among his followers, all the voluminous quibbles of the civil law, and still more of the later canon law; which latter we see at the present day holding the highest position in jurisprudence, and controlling our destiny.

As for the island of Utopia, which I hear is also called *Udepotia*¹, it is said (if we are to believe the story), by what must be owned a singular good fortune, to have adopted Christian usages both in public and in private; to have imbibed the wisdom thereto belonging; and to have kept it undefiled to this very day. The reason is, that it holds with firm grip to three divine institutions:—namely, the absolute equality, or, if you prefer to call it so, the civil communication², of all things good and bad among fellow-citizens; a settled and unwavering love of peace and quietness; and a contempt for gold and silver. Three things these, which overturn, one may say, all fraud, all imposture, cheating, roguery, and unprincipled deception. Would that Providence, on its own behalf³, would cause these ciuilis pontificiique adeo recentioris argumentosa uolumina inter suos quidem abrogasse mihi uidetur; quod ipsum ius hodie arcem tenere prudentiæ uidemus, ac fata nostra regere.

VTOPIA uero insula, quam etiam VDEPOTIAM appellari audio, mirifica utique sorte (si credimus) Christianos uero^a ritus ac germanam ipsam sapientiam publice priuatimque hausisse perhibetur, intemperate tamque ad hunc usque diem seruasse: utpote quæ tria diuina instituta, hoc est, bonorum malorumque inter ciues æqualitatem, seu malis ciuilitatem, numeris omnibus absolutam; et pacis ac tranquillitatis amorem constantem ac pertinacem; et auri argentique contemptum, consertis (ut aiunt) manibus retinet: tria (ut ita loquar) euerticula omnium fraudum, imposturarum, circumscriptionum, uersutiarum et planicarum improbitatum. Superi suo nomine facerent ut

^a om. ed. 1548, recte.

¹ As much as to say Nunquamia, as well as Nusquamia; Kennaquhan, as well as Kennaquhair.—On the meanings which the name Utopia can be made to bear, see the Introduction, p. xl.

² I do not feel sure what Budé exactly meant by ciuilitas, but have taken it to signify the title to share, as citizens, in the common property.

³ Lat. suo nomine: unless the reading should be suo numine.

three principles of Utopian law to be fixed in the minds of all men by the rivets of a strong and settled conviction. We should soon see pride, covetousness, insane competition, and almost all other deadly weapons of our adversary the Devil, fall powerless; we should see the interminable array of law-books, [the work of]¹ so many excellent and solid understandings, that occupy men till the very day of their death, consigned to book-worms, as mere hollow and empty things, or else given up to make wrapping-paper for shops.

Good heavens! what holiness of the Utopians has had the power of earning such a blessing from above, that greed and covetousness have for so many ages failed to enter, either by force or stealth, into that island alone? that they have failed to drive out from it, by wanton effrontery, justice and honour?

Would that great Heaven in its goodness had dealt so kindly with the countries which keep, and would not part with, the appellation they bear, derived from His most holy name! Of a truth, greed, which perverts and sinks down so many minds, otherwise noble and elevated, would be gone from hence once for haec tria Vtopianae legis capita trabalibus clavis firmac ac statae persuasionis in sensibus omnium mortalium figerentur. Protinus superbiam, cupiditatem, contentionem uaesanam, atque alia pene omnia uulnifica Stygii aduersarii tela concidere languereque uideres; iurisque illam uoluminum uim immensam, tot eximia solidaque ingenia ad libitinam usque detinentia, ut cassa et uacantia, teredinibus 8 permitti aut inuolucris officinarum dicari.

Proh diui immortales: quae nam Vtopianorum sanctitas eam diuinitus beatitudinem emereri potuit, ut auaritia et cupiditas in eam unam insulam irrumpere aut irrepere tot seculis non potuerit? nec inde iusticiam cum pudore proteruitate sua impudentiaque explodere et exigere?

Deus nunc optimus maximus tam benigne cum iis prouinciis egisset, quae ab eius sacratissimo nomine cognomentum retinent et amplectuntur: certe auaritia, tot mentes alioquin egregias arduasque deprauans et pessumdans, semel hinc facesseret, et aureum seculum

¹ If detinentia in the Latin be correct, this is the only way in which I can understand the passage. But it seems more likely that delinentium

was originally written:—‘law-books, that keep so many excellent and solid understandings occupied on them, till the very day of death.’

all, and the golden age of Saturn would return. In Utopia one might verily suppose that there is a risk of Aratus and the early poets having been mistaken in their opinion, when they made Justice depart from earth, and placed her in the Zodiac¹. For, if we are to believe Hythloday, she must needs have stayed behind in that island, and not yet made her way to heaven.

But in truth I have ascertained by full inquiry, that Utopia lies outside the bounds of the known world. It is in fact one of the Fortunate Isles, perhaps very close to the Elysian Fields; for More himself testifies that Hythloday has not yet stated its position definitely. It is itself divided into a number of cities, but all uniting or confederating into one state, named Hagnopolis²; a state contented with its own customs, its own goods, blest with innocence, leading a kind of heavenly life, on a lower level indeed than heaven, but above the defilements of this world we know³, which amid the endless pursuits of mankind, as empty and vain as they are Saturniumque rediret. Hic enimvero periculum esse quispiam autumarit, ne forte Aratus et poetae prisca opinione falsi fuerint; qui iusticiam e terris decedentem in signifero circulo collocauerunt; restitisse enim eam in Vtopia insula necesse est, si Hythlodæo credimus, necdum in coelum peruenisse.

Verum ego Vtopiam extra mundi cogniti fines sitam esse percunctando comperi, insulam nimirum fortunatam, Elysiis fortasse campis proximam (nam Hythlodæus nondum situm eius finibus certis tradidit, ut Morus ipse testatur), multas quidem ipsam in urbes distractam, sed unam in ciuitatem coeuntes aut conspirantes, nomine Hagnopolin, suis utique ritibus bonisque acquiescentem, innocentia beatam, coelestem quodammodo uitam agentem, ut infra | coelum, sic supra mundi huius cogniti colluionem; quae in tot mortalium studiis, ut acribus

¹ 'Sic iusta in populos mox Virginis inculpatae

Exarsere odia, et caelum pernicibus intrat

Diua alis.'

Festi Avieni Aratea Phaenomena.

The allusions to Astraea are common in the poets.

² As Budé had suggested that the island was also called Udepotia, he here takes the further liberty of calling the imaginary state Hagnopolis, 'Holy City,' or 'City of the Saints.' Compare the last words of the passage quoted above, p. xxxvi, n. 3, and what was said before about More's lectures on the Civitas Dei, p. xlix.

³ See Colet's Lectures on 1 Cor., p. 30.

keen and eager, is being hurried in a swollen and eddying tide to the cataract.

It is to Thomas More, then, that we owe our knowledge of this island. It is he who, in our generation, has made public this model of a happy life and rule for leading it, the discovery, as he tells us, of Hythloday: for he ascribes all to him. For while Hythloday has built the Utopians their state, and established for them their rites and customs; while, in so doing, he has borrowed from them and brought home for us the representation of a happy life; it is beyond question More, who has set off by his literary style the subject of that island and its customs. He it is who has perfected, as by rule and square, the City of the Hagnopolitans itself, adding all those touches by which grace and beauty and weight accrue to the noble work; even though in executing that work he has claimed for himself only a common mason's share. We see that it has been a matter of conscientious scruple with him, not to assume too important a part in the work, lest Hythloday should have just cause for complaint, on the ground of More having plucked the first flowers of that fame, which would have been left for him, if he had himself ever decided to give an account of his adventures to the world. He was afraid, of course, that Hythloday, who was residing of his own choice in the island of et incitatis, sic inanibus et irritis, turbide et aestuose in praecipitium rapitur.

Eius igitur insulae cognitionem Thomae Moro debemus, qui beatae uitae exemplar ac uiuendi praescriptum aetate nostra promulgauit, ab Hythlodaeo, ut ipse tradit, inuentum, cui omnia fert accepta. Qui ut Vtopianis ciuitatem architectatus sit, ritusque illis et instituta condiderit, id est, beatae uitae argumentum nobis inde mutuatus sit et importarit; Morus certe insulam et sancta instituta stilo orationeque illustrauit, ac ciuitatem ipsam Hagnopolitanorum ad normam regulamque expoliuit, omniaque ea addidit, unde operi magnifico decor uenustasque accedit et autoritas; etiam si in ea opera nauanda sibi tantum partes structoris uendicauit. Videlicet religio fuit maiores sibi partes in eo opere sumere, ne Hythlodaeus iure queri posset, gloriam sibi a Moro praecerpam prae floratamque relinquere, si quando suos ipse labores literis mandare constituisset: ἐλαβουμένου δῆθεν αὐτοῦ, μὴ ἰθλόδαιος αὐτός, ὁ τῆ ὕδραπορίας νήσῳ ἐμφιλοχωρῶν, ἐπιφανείς ποτε

Udepotia, might some day come in person upon the scene, and be vexed and aggrieved at this unkindness on his part, in leaving him the glory of this discovery with the best flowers plucked off. To be of this persuasion is the part of good men and wise.

Now while More is one who of himself carries weight, and has great authority to rest upon, I am led to place unreserved confidence in him by the testimony of Peter Giles of Antwerp. Though I have never made his acquaintance in person—apart from recommendations of his learning and character that have reached me—I love him on account of his being the intimate friend of the illustrious Erasmus, who has deserved so well of letters of every kind, whether sacred or profane; with whom personally I have long corresponded and formed ties of friendship.

Farewell, my dear Lupset. Greet for me, at the first opportunity, either by word of mouth or by letter, Linacre, that pillar of the British name in all that concerns good learning; one who is now, as I hope, not more yours than ours. He is one δυσχεράνει καὶ βαρύνοιτο τάντην ἀγνωμοσύνην αὐτοῦ τοῦγε ἐγκαταλιπόντος αὐτῷ προαπηθισμένον τὸ κλέος τοῦ ἐυρέματος τούτου. οὕτω γὰρ πεπεῖσθαι, πρὸς ἀνδρῶν ἐστὶν ἀγαθῶντε καὶ σοφῶν¹.

MORO autem homini per se graui et autoritate magna subnixo, fidem plane ut habeam, efficit Petri Aegidii Hantuerpiensis testimonium; 10 quem uirum | nunquam coram a me cognitum (mitto nunc doctrinae morumque commendationem), eo nomine amo, quod ERASMI clarissimi uiri, ac de literis sacris, profanis omneque genus meritissimi, amicus est iuratissimus; quicum etiam ipso iamdiu societatem amicomorum contraxi, liceris ultro citroque obsignatis.

Vale, Lupsete mi dilectissime, et LINACRUM Britannici nominis columen (quod quidem ad literas bonas attinet) non magis iam uestrum (ut spero) quam nostrum, uerbis meis saluta, uel coram uel epistola internuncia, idque primo quoque tempore. Is enim unus est

¹ The Greek is here printed as it stands, with the breathings over the first vowels of diphthongs. It is quite in keeping with Budé's general style, to branch off in this way into Greek.

Perhaps he was tempted by the occurrence to his mind of δῆθεν, as a word specially suited to the irony of his tone in this passage.

of the few whose good opinion I should be very glad, if possible, to gain. When he was himself known to be staying here, he gained in the highest degree the good opinion of me and of Jehan Ruelle, my friend and the sharer in my studies¹. And his singular learning and careful industry I should be the first to look up to and strive to copy.

Greet More also once and again for me, either by message, as I said before, or by word of mouth. As I think and often repeat, Minerva has long entered his name on her selectest album; and I love and revere him in the highest degree for what he has written about this isle of the New World, Utopia.

In his history our age and those which succeed it will have a nursery, so to speak, of polite and useful institutions; from which men may borrow customs, and introduce and adapt them each to his own state. Farewell.

From Paris, the 31st of July².

paucorum, quibus me perlubens approbarim, si possim; cum et ipse coram hic agens mihi se summe Ioannique Ruellio amico meo studio-rumque conscio probauerit; et eius excellentem doctrinam exactam-que diligentiam in primis suspiciam aemularique contendam. Velim etiam ut Moro salutem unam et alteram mandato meo uel mittas, ut dixi, uel dicas; quem uirum in Mineruae sacratius album iamdiu opinione mea sermoneque meo relatum, de Vtopia noui orbis insula summe et amo et ueneror. Eius enim historiam aetas nostra posteræque aetates habebunt uelut elegantium utiliumque institutorum seminarium, unde translaticios mores in suam quisque ciuitatem importent et accommodent. Vale, Parisiis pridie Cal. August.

¹ Joannes Ruellius is mentioned in a letter of Erasmus, dated Antwerp, 1517, as a physician who, like Linacre, had had the good fortune to learn Greek in early life. Epist. ed. 1642, col. 629. He published in 1536 a treatise De natura stirpium, printed at Paris by Colinaeus, in folio; 'a magnificent book,' as it is called by Greswell: View of the Parisian Greek Press, i. 91 n.

² No year is given; but it must have been 1517.

¶ A shorte meter of Utopia, written by Anemolius¹ poete laureate, and nephewe to Hythlodaye by his sister².

ME Vtopie cleped Antiquitie, Voyde of haunte and herboroughe.
 Nowe am I like to Platoes citie,
 Whose fame flieth the worlde throughe.
 Yea like, or rather more likely Platoes platte³ to excell and passe.
 For what Platoes penne hathe platted briefly
 In naked wordes, as in a glasse,
 The same haue I perfourmed fully,
 With lawes, with men, and treasure fyttely.
 Wherefore not Vtopie, but rather rightely
 My name is Eutopie⁴: A place of felicitie.

11

HEXASTICHON ANEMOLII POETAE LAV
 REATI, HYTHLODAEI EX SORO-
 RE NEPOTIS IN VTOPI-AM INSVLAM.

Vtopia priscis dicta ob infrequentiam,
 Nunc ciuitatis aemula Platonicae, Fortasse uictrix, (nam quod illa literis
 Deliniauit, hoc ego una praestiti, Viris et opibus, optimisque legibus)
 Eutopia merito sumi uocanda nomine.

¹ The name is familiar from the use of the word in Homer, ἀνεμώλιος, in its figurative sense of 'braggart,' lit. 'windy.' Ventosus is used in a similar way in Latin, as in Cicero's 'homo ventosissimus' (Epist. ad Fam. xi. 9). So the name of Anemolians (inf. p. 177) is given to a vain, boastful people. It is probable that, in calling Anemolius 'poet laureate' here, a hit is intended at John Skelton, who bore that title in More's time.—See the references in Dyce's ed. of Skelton's works (1843), vol. i. p. xii. Skelton was the great opponent of More's fiend Lily.

² Hythlodaye would thus be his avunculus, not patruus; a distinction that may have been here intended. For Hythlodaye see note below, p. 26.

³ The sense of this word is defined by 'platted' in the next line, and that by the Latin 'deliniauit,' 'marked out,' 'plotted out,' as is said of an estate in the hands of surveyors.

⁴ See the Introduction, p. xl.

¶ A Meter of .iiii. verses in the Utopian tongue, briefely touchinge adwell the straunge
-beginning, as also the happie and wealthie continuance of the same common wealth.

MY kinge and conquerour Vtopus by name
A prince of much renowne and immortall fame Hath made me an yle that earst no ylande was,
Ful fraught¹ with worldly welth, with pleasure and solas.
I one of all other without philosophie
Haue shaped for man a philosophicall citie.
As myne I am nothings daungerous² to imparte,
So better to receaue I am readie with al my harte.

HORVM VERSVVM AD VERBVM HAEC
EST SENTENTIA.

Vtopus me dux ex non insula fecit insulam.
Vna ego terrarum omnium absque philosophia
Ciuitatem philosophicam expressi mortalibus.
Libenter impartio mea, non grauatim accipio meliora.

NOTE TO THE UTOPIAN ALPHABET.—
In the first edition this is printed on the obverse of leaf 2, the 'Hexastichon Anemolii' being on the reverse. In the first edition also the shape of the Utopian letters is a little simpler, the curves not being turned in at the extremities. Some of the words, as 'gymnosophon,' are evidently reminiscences of Greeck; but I have not discovered any key to them, if indeed they were ever intended to have any meaning. The alphabet is not printed in the editions of 1517 or 1548.

Robynson prefaces his rendering of the lines, given on the facsimile opposite, by the words: 'Whiche verses the translator, accordinge to his simple knowledge, and meane vnderstanding in the Utopian tongue, hath thus rudely englished.'

¹ That is, fraught, or laden.

² That is, I make no obstacle. 'Difficultas,' 'mora,' are among the interpretations of 'dangerium' given by Maigne d'Arnis.

UTOPIENSIVM ALPHABETVM. 13

a b c d e f g h i k l m n o p q r s t u x y 0

TETRASTICHON VERNACVLA VTO-PIENSIVM LINGVA.

Vtopos ha Boccas peula chama.
 0
 polta chamaan

Bargol he maglomi baccan 0 soma gymnosophaon

Agrama gymnosophon labarem 0 bacha bodamilomin

Voluala barchin heman la 0 lauoluola dramme pagloni.

0
 HORVM VERSVVM AD VERBVM HAEC
 EST SENTENTIA.

Vtopus me dux ex non insula fecit insulam.
 Vna ego terrarum omnium absq; philosophia.
 Ciuitatem philosophicam expressi mortalibus.
 Libenter impartio mea, non grauatum accipio meliora.

b ;

¶ To the right honourable Hierome Buslyde, prouost of Arieñ, and counselloure to the catholike kinge Charles, Peter Gyles¹ Citizein of Antwerpe, wisheth health and felicitie².

Thomas More the singular ornamente of this our age, as you your self (right honourable Buslide) can witness, to whome he is perfectly wel knowen, sent vnto me this other day the ylande of Vtopia, to very few as yet knowen, but most worthy which, as farre excelling Platoes commen wealthe, all

14

☉ CLARISSIMO D◀

HIERONYMO BVSLIDIO PRAEPOSITO
ARIENSI. CATHOLICI REGIS CA
ROLI A CONSILII, PETRVS
AEGIDIVS ANTVERPI-
ENSIS S. D.

SUPERIOR¹BVS hisce diebus, amantissime Buslidi, misit ad me Thomas ille Morus, te quoque teste, cui notissimus est, eximium huius aetatis nostrae decus, Vtopiam insulam, paucis adhuc mortalibus cognitam, sed dignam imprimis quam ut plusquam plato-

¹ For Peter Giles, see below. p. 1.

² The translation of this letter is taken from Robynson's second edition, where it occupies leaves S iiii. and v., ending on the obv. of S. vi. It did not appear in his first edition.

Hierome Busleyden, or, as Robynson variously calls him, Buslyde, Buslide, and Buslid, was, at the time when this letter was written, Provost (Propst) of the church of Aire, a town now reckoned in the Pas de Calais, at the confluence of the Lys and the Laquette. He was of a good Luxembourg family. One of his brothers, Francis, had been tutor to the Archduke Philip. Another, Giles, held a position in the Spanish Exchequer.

people shoulde be willinge to know: specially of a man most eloquent so finely set furth, so conningly painted out, and so evidently subiect to the eye, that as oft as I reade it, me thinketh that I see somewhat more, then when I heard Raphael Hythloday¹ himselfe (for I was present at that talke aswell as master More) vtterying and pronouncing his owne woordes: yea, though the same man, accordinge to his pure eloquence, did so open and declare the matter, that he might plainly enough appeare to reporte not thinges, which he had learned of others onelye by hearesay, but which he had with his own eyes presently sene, and throughly vewed, and wherin he had no smal time bene conuersant and abiding: a man trulie, in mine opinion, as touching the knowledge of regions, peoples, and worldly experience, muche passage, yea euen the very famous and renowned trauailer Vlysses: and in dede suche a one, as for the space of these viij. c. yeres past I think nature

nicam omnes uelint cognoscere, praesertim ab homine facundissimo sic expressam, sic depictam, sic oculis subiectam, ut, quoties lego, aliquanto plus mihi uidere uidear, quam cum ipsum Raphaelem Hythlodaeum (nam ei sermoni aequae interfui ac Morus ipse) sua uerba sonantem audirem; etiam si uir ille haud uulgari praeditus eloquentia sic rem exponeret, ut facile appareret eum non ea referre quae narrantibus aliis didicisset, sed quae cominus hausisset oculis, et in quibus non exiguum tempus esset uersatus; homo mea quidem sententia regionum, hominum, et rerum experientia uel ipso ulysse

Hierome himself was a canon of Brussels, and also of Mechlin (where he had a splendid house, more than once alluded to by More), and Cambray. He was Master of Requests and a Councillor of Charles, the young King of the Netherlands. But he is best known by his foundation of the Collegium Trilingue in the University of Louvain, for teaching the three learned tongues—Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. His will, containing the bequest for this purpose, was dated June 22, 1517. He died on the 26th of August in the same year. His foundation at Louvain met for a time with the same kind of opposition from the obstructive party (who, as Erasmus says, would rather be bilingues than trilingues), as did Colet's foundation in London.

For more about Busleyden, see Mullinger's University of Cambridge, pt. i. p. 565; and especially Nève's Mémoire historique et littéraire sur le Collège des trois Langues, 1856, pp. 36-40.

¹ See below, p. 29.

into the worlde brought not furth his like : in comparison of whome Vespuce maye be thought to haue sene nothing.

Moreouer, wheras we be wont more effectually and pitthely to declare and expresse thinges that we haue sene, then whiche we haue but onely hearde, there was besides that in this man a certen peculiar grace, and singular dexteritie to discriue and set furth a matter withall. Yet the selfe same thinges as ofte as I beholde and consider them drawen and painted oute with master Mores pensille, I am therewith so moued, so delited, so inflamed, and so rapt, that sometime me think I am presently conuersaunt, euen in the ylande of Vtopia. And I promise you, I can skante beleue that Raphael himselfe by al that fise yeres space that he was in Vtopia abiding, saw there somuch, as here in master Mores description is to be sene and perceaued. Whiche description with so manye wonders and miraculous thinges is replenished, that I stande in great doubt wherat first and chieflie to muse or marueile : whether at the excellencie of his perfect and suer memorie, which could welniegh worde by woorde rehearse so manye thinges once onely heard : or elles at his singular prudence, who so well and wittily marked and bare away al the originall causes and fountaynes (to the vulgare people commenly most vnknownen) wherof both yssueth and springeth the mortall confusion and vtter decaye of a commen wealth, and also the auancement and wealthy state of the same may riese and growe : or elles at the efficacie and superior, et qualem octingentis hisce annis nusquam arbitror natum ; ad quem collatus Vespuce nihil uidisse putetur.

15 Iam praeterea quod uisa quam audita narramus efficacius, aderat homini peculiaris quaedam ad explicandas res dexteritas. | Attamen eadem haec quoties Mori penicillo depicta contemplor, sic afficior, ut mihi uidear nonnunquam in ipsa uersari Vtopia. Et hercle crediderim Raphaelem ipsum minus in ea insula uidisse per omne quinquennium quod illic egit, quam in Mori descriptione uidere liceat. Tantum hic occurrit undique miraculorum, ut ambigam quid primum aut potissimum admirer : felicissimae memoriae fidem, quae tot res auditas duntaxat pene ad uerbum reddere potuerit ; an prudentiam, qui uulgo ignotissimos fontes, unde omnia reipublicae uel oriuntur mala, uel oriri possent mala, sic animaduertit ; an orationis uim ac pitthe of his woordes, which in so fine a latin stile, with suche force of eloquence hath couched together and comprised so many and diuers matters, speciallie beinge a man continuallie encombred with so manye busye and troublesome cares, both publique and priuate, as he is. Howbeit all these thinges cause you litle to maruell (righte honourable Buslid) for that you are familiarly and throughly acquainted with the notable, yea almost diuine witte of the man.

But nowe to procede to other matters, I suerly know nothing nedeful or requisite to be adioyned vnto his writinges. Onely a meter of .iiij. verses written in the Vtopian tongue, whiche after master Mores departure Hythloday by chaunce shewed me, that haue I caused to be added thereto, with the Alphabete of the same nation, and haue also garnished the margent of the boke with certen notes. For, as touchinge the situation of the ylande, that is to saye, in what parte of the worlde Vtopia standeth, the ignoraunce and lacke whereof not a litle troubleth and greueth master More, in dede Raphael left not that vnspoken of. Howbeit with verie fewe wordes he lightly touched it, incidentlye by the way passing it ouer, as meanyng of likelihod to kepe and reserue that to an other place. And the same, I wot not how, by a certen euell and vnluckie chaunce escaped vs bothe. For when Raphael was speaking therof, one of master Mores seruauentes came to him, and whispered in his facultatem, qua tanta sermonis latini puritate, tantis dicendi neruis, tot res complexus est, praesertim unus in tot publica simul et domestica negocia distractus. Verum haec omnia tu minus admiraris, doctissime Buslidi, qui familiari etiam consuetudine penitus habes cognitum homine maius ac prope diuinum hominis ingenium.

In caeteris igitur nihil est, quod illius scriptis queam adiicere. Tantum tetrastichum uernacula Vtopiensium lingua scriptum, quod a Mori discessu forte mihi ostendit Hythlodaeus, apponendum curauim, praefixo eiusdem gentis alphabeto, tum adiectis ad margines aliquot annotatiunculis. Nam quod de insulae situ laborat Morus, ne id quidem omnino tacuit Raphael, quamquam paucis admodum ac uelut obiter attigit, uelut hoc alii seruans loco. Atque id sane nescio quomodo casus quidam malus utrique nostrum inuidit. Siquidem, cum ea loqueretur Raphael, adierat Morum e famulis quispiam, | qui 16

eare. Wherefore I beyng then of purpose more earnestly addict to heare, one of the company, by reason of cold taken, I thinke, a shippeborde, coughed out so loude, that he toke from my hearinge certen of his wordes¹. But I wil neuer stynte, nor rest, vntil I haue gotte the full and exacte knowledge hereof: insomuche that I will be hable perfectly to instructe you, not onely in the longitude or true meridian of the ylande, but also in the iust latitude therof, that is to say, in the subleuation or height of the pole in that region, if our frende Hythloday be in safetie, and aliuie. For we heare very vncerten newes of him. Some reporte, that he died in his iorney home-ward. Some agayne affirme, that he retorned into his countrey; but partly, for that he coulde not away with the fashions of his countrey folk, and partly for that his minde and affection was altogether set and fixed vpon Vtopia, they say that he hathe taken his voyage thetherwarde agayne.

Now as touching this, that the name of this yland is nowhere founde amonge the olde and auncient cosmographers, this doubtte Hythloday himselfe verie well dissolued. For why, it is possible enoughe (quod he) that the name, whiche it had in olde time, was afterwarde chaunged, or elles that they neuer had knowledge of this iland: forasmuch as now in our time illi nescio quid diceret in aurem; ac mihi quidem tanto attentius auscultanti comitum quispiam clarius, ob frigus opinor nauigatione collectum, tussiens, dicentis uoces aliquot interceptit. Verum non conquiescam donec hanc quoque partem ad plenum cognouero; adeo ut non solum situm insulae, sed ipsam etiam poli sublacionem sim tibi ad unguem redditurus, si modo incolumis est noster Hythlodaeus; nam uarius de homine rumor adfertur: alii affirmant periisse in itinere; rursum alii reuersum in patriam; sed partim suorum mores non ferentem, partim Vtopiae desyderio sollicitatum, eo remigrasse.

Nam quod huius insulae nomen nusquam apud Cosmographos reperiatur, pulchre dissoluit Hythlodaeus ipse. Si quidem fieri potuit, inquit, ut nomen quo ueteres sint usi postea sit commutatum, aut etiam illos haec fugerit insula; quando et hodie complures

¹ For this artistic touch, reminding us of More's own hand, see the Introduction, p. xliii.

diuers landes be found, which to the olde Geographers were vnknownen. Howbeit, what nedeth it in this behalfe to fortifie the matter with argumentes, seyng master More is author hereof sufficient? But whereas he doubteth of the edition or imprinting of the booke, in deede herein I both commende, and also knowledge the mannes modestie. Howbeit vnto me it semeth a worke most vnworthie to be long suppressed, and most worthy to go abrod into the handes of men, yea, and vnder the title of youre name to be publyshed to the worlde: either because the singular endowmentes and qualities of master More be to no man better knowen then to you, or els bicause no man is more fitte and meete then you, with good counselles to further and auance the commen wealth, wherin you haue many yeares already continued and trauailed with great glory and commendation, bothe of wisdome and knowledge, and also of integritie and vprightnes. Thus o liberall supporter of good learninge, and floure of this oure time,

I byd you moste hartely well to fare. At Antwerpe .1516. the first daye of Nouember.

oriuntur terrae, priscis illis Geographis intactae. Quanquam quorum attinet hic argumentis astruere fidem, cum Morus ille sit author? Caeterum quod is ambigit de aeditione, equidem laudo et agnosco uiri modestiam. At uisum mihi est opus modis omnibus indignum quod diu premeretur, et cum primis dignum quod exeat in manus hominum; idque tuo potissimum nomine commendatum orbi: uel quod Mori dotes tibi praecipue sint perspectae, uel quod nemo magis idoneus qui rectis consiliis iuuet rem publicam, in qua iam annis compluribus summa cum laude uersaris tum prudentiae tum integritatis. Bene uale, studiorum Maecenas, et huius saeculi decus. Antuerpiae, An. M.D.XVI. Cal. Nouembr.

Thomas

More to Peter Giles¹ sendeth gretynge.

I Am almoste ashamed, right welbeloued Peter Giles, to sende vnto you this boke of the vtopian commenwealth, welnigh after a yeares space, which I am suer you loked for within a moneth and a half. And no marueil. For you knewe welenough, that I was already disbourdened of all the labour and study belonging to the inuention in this work, and that I had no nede at all to trouble my braynes about the disposition or conueyaunce of the matter; and therefore had herin nothing els to do, but only to rehearse those thinges, which you

THOMAS

MORUS PETRO

AEGIDIO

S.D.

PVdet me prope modum, charissime Petre Aegidi, libellum hunc, de Vtopiana re publica, post annum ferme ad te mittere, quem te non dubito intra sesquimenssem expectasse. quippe
18 quum scires mihi demptum in hoc opere inueniendi laborem, neque de dispositione quicquam fuisse cogitandum, cui tantum erant ea

¹ Petrus Gillius, or Aegidius, was born at Antwerp about 1486. His father Nicholas was 'quaestor urbis.' His studies were directed by Erasmus, with whom, as well as with More and Conrad Goclenius, he lived on terms of cordial friendship. The Epithalamium in Erasmus's Colloquies was composed for his marriage. In 1510 he was made Town Clerk (Stadtschreiber) of Antwerp. He died November 11, 1533. Some Latin poems of his are preserved and I togethers hard maister Raphaell tel and declare. Wherefore there was no cause whie I shold study to set forth the matter with eloquence; for asmuch as his talke cold not be fine and eloquent, being firste not studied for, but sodein and vnpremeditate, and then, as you know, of a man better sene in the greke language then in the latine tong. And my writing, the nigher it shold approche to his homely, playne, and simple speche, somuch the nigher shold it go to the trueth; whiche is the only marke, wherunto I do and ought to direct all my trauail and study herin.

I graunt and confesse, frende Peter, meself discharged of somuch labour, hauing all thies thinges redy done to my hand, that almoost there was nothing lefte for me to do. Elles other the inuention, or the disposition of this matter, might haue requyred of a witte, nother base nother at all vnlearned, bothe some time and leasure, and also recitanda, quae tecum una pariter audiui narrantem Raphaellem. quare nec erat quod in eloquendo laboraretur^a, quando nec illius sermo potuit exquisitus esse, quum esset primum subitarius atque extemporalis, deinde hominis, ut scis, non perinde Latine docti quam Graece, et mea oratio quanto accederet propius ad illius neglectam simplicitatem, tanto futura sit propior ueritati, cui hac in re soli curam et debeo et habeo.

Fateor, mi Petre, mihi adeo multum laboris hiis rebus paratis detractum, ut pene nihil fuerit relictum. alioquin huius rei uel excogitatio, uel oeconomia, potuisset ab ingenio neque infimo neque prorsus indocto postulare tum temporis nonnihil tum studii, quod

^a laboretur, A¹.

at the beginning of vol. i. of the Delitiae Poetarum Belgicorum, 1614. Like More's Epigrammata, they are imitations of the classical style, and sometimes coarse. In 1519 he published a Threnodia on the death of the Emperor Maximilian, with other pieces. There is a charming letter of Erasmus to him on the death of his father, and on the bringing up of his child Nicholas, called after his grandfather. Epist.

1642, p. 761.—See Foppens, Bibliotheca Belgica, 1739, ii. p. 948 b.

¹ The various readings at the foot of the Latin text, denoted by A, are from the first edition of 1516; those denoted by B, from the Paris edition of 1517. Those at the foot of the English text are from Robynson's second edition of 1556. The figures on the inner margin refer to the pages of the edition of 1518.

some studye. But yf yt were requysyte and necessary, that the matter shoulde also haue bene wryten eloquentelye, and not alone truelye: of a suerty that thynges coulde I haue perfourmed by no tyme nor studye. But nowe, seyng all thyes cares, stayes, and lettes were taken awaye, wherin elles somuche laboure and studye shoulde haue bene employed; and that there remayned no other thyng for me to doo, but onelye to wryte playnlye the matter as I hard it spoken; that in dede was a thyng lyghte and easye to be done. Howe beit, to the dyspatchynge of thys so lytell busynes my other cares and troubles did leaue almooste lesse then no leasure. Whyles¹ I doo daylye bestowe my tyme abowte lawe matters; some to pleade, some to heare, some as an arbytratour wyth myne awarde to determyne, some as an vmpier or a iudge with my sentence finallye to discusse; whiles I go one way to see and visite my frend, an other way about mine owne privat affaires; whiles I spend almost al the day abroad amonges other, and the residue at home among mine own; I leaue to meselfe, I meane to my boke, no time.

For when I am come home, I muste comen with my si exigeretur, ut diserte etiam res, non tantum uere, scriberetur, id uero a me praestari nullo tempore, nullo studio potuisset. Nunc uero quum ablatis curis hiis, in quibus tantum fuit sudoris exhauriendum, restiterit tantum hoc, uti sic simpliciter scriberentur audita, nihil erat negotii. Sed huic tamen nihilo negotii peragendo, caetera negotia 19 mea minus fere quam nihil tempo|ris reliquerunt. Dum causas forenseis assidue alias agō, alias audio, alias arbiter finio, alias iudex dirimo; dum hic officii causa uisitur, ille negotii; dum foris totum ferme diem aliis impartior, reliquum meis; relinquo mihi, hoc est literis, nihil.

Nempe reuerso domum, cum uxore fabulandum est, garriendum

¹ The sentence which follows is an example of Robynson's diffuse style. Burnet renders more compactly, but less pleasantly: 'For while in pleading, and hearing, in judging or composing of Causes, in waiting on some Men upon Business, and on others out of Respect, the greatest part of the Day is spent on other Men's Affairs,' &c.

wife, chatte with my chyldren, and talke wyth my seruauntes. All the whyche thynges I reken and accompte emonge busynes, forasmuche as they muste of necessytye be done: and done muste they nedes be, oneles a man wyll be a straunger in hys owne howse¹. And in any wyse a man muste so fassyon and order hys condytyons, and so appoynte and dyspose hym selfe, that he be merye, iocunde, and pleasaunte amonge them, whome eyther nature hath prouyded, or chaunce hathe made, or he hymselfe hathe chosen, to be the fellowes and companys of hys lyfe: so that wyth to muche gentle behauyoure and familyaryte he doo not marre them, and, by tomuche sufferance, of hys seruauntes make them hys maysters. Emonge thys thinges nowe rehearsed stealethe awaye the daye, the moneth, the yeare. When doo I wryte, then? And all thys whyle haue I spoken no woorde of slepe, nother yet of meate, whyche emonge a greate number doth waste no lesse tyme then dothe slepe, wherin almooste halfe the lyfe tyme of man crepethe awaye. I therefore doo wyne and gette onelye that tyme, whyche I steale from slepe and meate². Whyche tyme because cum liberis, colloquendum cum ministris. quae ego omnia inter negocia numero, quando fieri necesse est (necesse est autem, nisi uelis esse domi tuae peregrinus) et danda omnino opera est, ut quos uitae tuae comites aut natura prouidit, aut fecit casus, aut ipse delegisti, hiis ut te quam iucundissimum compares, modo ut ne comitate corrumpas, aut indulgentia ex ministris dominos reddas. Inter haec quae dixi elabitur dies, mensis, annus. Quando ergo scribimus? nec interim de somno quicquam sum loquutus, ut nec de cibo quidem, qui multis non minus absomit temporis quam somnus ipse, qui uitae

¹ For this picture of More's domestic life, see above, p. xxi.

² According to Stapleton, More's habit was to give but four or five hours each night to sleep. He rose at two. 'Hora secunda matutina surgere solitus, usque ad septimam studiis ac precibus se dabat.' Tres Thomae, ed.

1689, p. 14. The contemporary French adage was more lenient:—

'Lever à cinq, diner à neuf, Souper à cinq, coucher à neuf,
Fait vivre d'une nonante et neuf.'

See Southey's Common-Place Book, iii. p. 11.

yt ys verye littell, and yet somewhat it is, therefore haue I ones at the last, thoughe it be longe first, finished Vtopia, and haue sent it to you, frende Peter, to reade and peruse; to the intent that if anye thyng haue escaped me, you might putte me in remembraunce of it. For though in this behalf I do not greatly mistruste meself (whiche woulde God I were somewhat in witte and learnyng, as¹ I am not all of the worste and dullest memory), yet haue I not so great trust and confidence in it, that I thinke nothing could fall out of my mynde.

For John Clement² my boye, who as yow knowe was there present with vs, whome I suffer to be awaye from no talke, wherin may be anye profit or goodnes (for out of this yong bladed and newe shotte vp corne, whiche hath alredy begonne to sprynge vp bothe in Latine and Greke learnyng, I looke for plentiful increase at length absumit ferme dimidium. At mihi hoc solum temporis adquire, quod somno ciboque suffuror, quod quoniam parcum est, lente, quia tamen aliquid, aliquando perfeci, atque ad te, mi Petre, transmisi Vtopiam, ut ²⁰ legeres, et si quid effugisset nos, uti tu admoneres. Quanquam enim non hac parte penitus diffido mihi (qui utinam sic ingenio atque doctrina aliquid essem, ut memoria non usquequaque destituor) non usqueadeo tamen confido, ut credam nihil mihi potuisse excidere.

Nam et Ioannes Clemens, puer meus, qui adfuit, ut scis^a, una, ut quem a nullo patior sermone abesse in quo aliquid esse fructus potest, quoniam ab hac herba, qua^b et latinis literis et Gracis coepit evires-

^a sis, A.

^b Leg. quae.

¹ That is, in proportion as.

² John Clement was educated under Lily, and then taken into the household of Sir Thomas More, whose adopted daughter, Margaret Gigs, he afterwards married. The high expectations More entertained of his proficiency in Greek and Latin were fulfilled. He assisted Colet in his study of Greek. In 1519 he was Reader of Wolsey's Greek lecture at Oxford, in which office he was succeeded by Lupset. Turning his attention to medicine, he was made a member of the newly-founded College of Physicians. More, in an undated letter to Erasmus (Jortin, iii. 342) speaks of him as 'nemini aliquando cessurus' in that capacity. Under the reigns of Edward VI and Elizabeth he went abroad, to escape persecution, and died at Mechlin in 1572. His wife had died two years before. For an account of his family, see Bridgett's Life of More, p. 126 n.

of goodly rype grayne), he, I saye, hath brought me into a greate doubt. For wheras Hythlodaye (oneles my memory fayle me) sayde that the bridge of Amaurote¹, which goeth ouer the riuer of Anyder², is fyue hundreth paseis, that is to saye, half a myle, in lengthe; my Jhon sayeth that ii. hundred of those paseis must be plucked away; for that the ryuer conteyneth there not aboute thre hundreth paseis in bredthe. I praye yow hartely call the matter to youre remembraunce. For if you agree with hym, I also wyll saye as you saye, and confesse me selfe deceaued. But if you cannot remember the thyng, then suerly I wyl write as I haue done, and as myne owne remembraunce serueth me. For as I will take good hede that there be in my booke nothyng false, so, if there be anythyng in doubt, I wyll rather tell a lye then make a lye; bicause I had be good then wise rather³.

Howbeit this matter maye easely be remedied, if yow wyll take the paynes to aske the question of Raphaell cere³, egregiam aliquando frugem spero, in magnam me coniecit dubitationem^a. si quidem quum, quantum ego recordor, Hythlodaeus narrauerit Amauroticum illum pontem, quo fluuius Anydrus insternitur, quingentos habere passus in longum, Ioannes meus ait detrahendos esse ducentos: latitudinem fluminis haud supra trecentos ibi continere. Ego te rogo rem ut reuoces in memoriam. Nam si tu cum illo sentis, ego quoque adsentiar et me lapsum credam. sin ipse non recolis^b, scribam ut feci quod ipse recordari uideor mihi. nam ut maxime curabo ne quid sit in libro falsi, ita si quid sit in ambiguo, potius mendacium dicam quam mentiar, quod malim bonus esse quam prudens.

^a rather be good then wilie.

Quanquam | facile fuerit huic mederi morbo, si ex Raphaele ipso aut 21 praesens scisciteris, aut per literas, quod necesse est facias uel ob

^a magnum . . . dubium, A.

^b recolas, A.

¹ Described more fully below, p. 128, where see the note.

² See note below, p. 127.

³ Eviresco, in the sense of 'fade,' is given in the Cornucopiae on the authority of Varro, but appears to have no classical authority.

himselfe, by worde of mouthe, if he be nowe with yow, or els by youre letters. Which you must nedes do for an other doubtte also, whiche hath chaunced, throughe whoes faulte I cannot tell, whether throughe myne or youres or Raphaels. For neither we remembred to enquire of hym, nor he to tell vs, in what parte of that newe worlde Vtopia is situate. The whiche thinge I had rather haue spent no small somme of money then that it should thus haue escaped vs; aswell for that I am ashamed to be ignoraunt in what sea that Ilande standeth, wherof I write so longe a treatyse, as also because there be with vs certayne men, and especially one deuoute^a and godly man, and a professour of diuinitie¹, who is excedynge desierous to go vnto Vtopia; not for a vayne and curious desiere to see newes, but to the intent he maye further and increase oure religion, whiche is there already luckely begoune. And that he may the better accomplyshe and alium scrupulum, qui nobis incidit, nescio mea ne culpa magis, an tua, an Raphaelis ipsius. Nam neque nobis in mentem uenit quaerere; neque illi dicere, qua in parte noui illius orbis Vtopia sita sit. Quod non fuisse praetermissum sic uellem profecto mediocri pecunia mea redemptum, uel quod subpudet me nescire, quo in mari sit insula de qua tam multa recenseam, uel quod sunt apud nos unus et alter, sed unus maximè, uir pius et professione Theologus, qui miro flagrat desyderio adeundae Vtopiae, non inani et curiosa libidine collustrandi noua, sed uti religionem nostram, feliciter ibi coeptam, foueat atque adaugeat. Quod quo faciat rite, decreuit ante curare ut mittatur have foretold, in a sermon preached at St. Paul's, that 'the introduction of printing would be the bane of the Roman Catholic religion.' He resigned the vicarage of Croyden in 1538, retiring on a pension of £12 for life. See Lysons' Enviours of London (1792), i. p. 189. In what follows Robynson seems to have hesitated about translating Pontifex by Pope — see his later rendering in the note.

^a vertuous.

¹ In the edition of Robynson's translation published in 1624 is the marginal note opposite this: 'It is thought of some that here is vnfaignedly meant the late famous Vicar of Croyden in Surrey.' This was Rowland Phillips, Canon of St. Paul's and Warden of Merton College, Oxford, who was collated to the vicarage of Croyden in 1497. He was 'esteemed a notable preacher' (Holinshed), and is said to

perfourme this his good intent, he is mynded to procure that he maye be sent thether of the byshoppe^a, yea and that he hymselfe maye be made bishop of Vtopia; beyng nothyng scrupulous herein, that he must obteyne this byshopricke with suete. For he counteth that a godly suete, whiche procedeth not of the desiere of honour or lucre, but only of a godly zeale.

Wherfore I moste earnestly desyere you, frende Peter, to talke with Hythlodaye, if you can, face to face, or els to wryte youre letters to hym; and so to worke in this matter, that in this my booke there maye neyther any thyng be founde whiche is vntrue, neither any thinge be lacking whiche is true. And I thinke verely it shalbe well done that you shewe vnto hym the booke it selfe. For if I haue myssed or fayled in any poynte, or if any faulte haue escaped me, no man can so well correcte and amende it, as he can: and yet that can he not do, oneles he peruse and reade ouer my booke written. Moreouer by this meanes shal you perceauē, whether he be well wyllynge and contente that I should vndertake to put thys worke in wryting. For if he be mynded to publyshe and put forth his owne labours and trauayles hymselfe, perchance he would be lothe, and so would I also, that in publyshynge a Pontifice, atque adeo ut creetur Vtopiensibus Episcopus, nihil eo scrupulo retardatus, quod hoc antistitium sit illi precibus impetrandum. Quippe sanctum ducit ambitum, quem non honoris aut quaestus ratio, sed pietatis respectus pepererit.

^a by the hiege Byshoppe.

Sanctus
ambitus.

Quamobrem te oro, mi Petre, uti aut praesens, si potes commode, aut absens per epistolam, compelles Hythlodaeum atque efficias, ne quicquam huic operi meo aut insit falsi aut ueri desyderetur. Atque haud scio an praestet ipsum ei librum ostendi. Nam neque alius aequae sufficit, si quid est erratum corrigere, neque is ipse aliter hoc praestare potest, quam si quae sunt a me scripta perlegerit. Ad haec: fiet ut hoc pacto intelligas, accipiat ne libenter, an grauatim ferat, hoc operis a me conscribi. Nempe si suos labores decreuit ipse the Vtopiane weale publyque, I should preuente^a and take from hym the flower and grace of the noueltie of this his historie.

Howbeit, to saye the verie truthe, I am not yet fully determined with meselfe, whether I wyll put forth my booke or no. For the natures of men be so diuers, the phantasies of some so wayewarde, their myndes so vnkynde, their iudgementes so corrupte, that they which leade a merie and a iocunde lyfe, followinge their owne sensuall pleasures and carnal lustes¹, maye seme to be in a muche better state or case, then they that vexe and vnquiete themselves with cares and studie for the puttyng forth and publyshynge of some thyng, that maye be either profett or pleasure to other; whiche^b neuertheles wyl disdaynfully, scornefully, and vnkyndly accepte the same. The moste parte of al be vnlearned: and a great numbere hath learnynge in contempte. The rude and barbarous alloweth nothyng but that which is verie barbarous in dede. If it be one that hath a lytell smacke of learnynge, he reiecteth as homely^c and commen ware whatsoever is mandare literis, nolit fortasse me: neque ego certe uelim, Vtopiensium per me uulgata republica, florem illi gratiamque nouitatis historiae suae praeripere.

^a preuente him.

^b whiche others.

^c homely geare.

Quanquam ut uere dicam, nec ipse mecum satis adhuc constitui, an sim omnino aediturus. Etenim tam uaria sunt palata mortalium, tam morosa quorundam ingenia, tam ingrati animi, tam absurda iudicia, ut cum hiis haud paulo felicius agi uideatur, qui iucundi atque hilares genio indulgent suo, quam qui semet macerant curis, ut aedant aliquid quod aliis, aut fastidientibus aut ingratibus, uel utilitati possit esse uel uoloptati. Plurimi literas nesciunt: multi contemnunt. Barbarus ut durum reiicit, quicquid non est plane barbarum. Scioli aspernantur ut triuiale,

Ingrata
hominum
iudicia.

¹ This is going wide of indulgent genio, which is simply 'follow their bent,' or gratify their natural inclination. Erasmus notes the proverb in his Adagia.

not stuffed full of olde moughteaten wordes^a, and that be worne out of vse. Some there be that haue pleasure onely in olde rustie antiquities; and some onely in their owne doinges. One is so sowre, so crabbed, and so vnpleasaunt¹, that he can awaye with no myrthe nor sporte. An other is so narrow in^b the sholders², that he can beare no iestes nor tawntes. Some selie poore soules be so aferd that at euery snappishe worde their nose shalbe bitten of, that they stande in no lesse drede of euerye quicke and sharpe worde, then he that is bytten of a madde dogge feareth water. Some be so mutable and wauer- yng, that euery houre they be in a newe mynde, sainge one thyng syttinge, and an other thyng standyng. An other sorte sytteth upon their allebencheis, and there amonge their cuppes they geue iudgement of the wittes of wryters, and with greate auctoritie they condemne euen as pleaseth them euery wryter accordyng to his writinge; in moste spiteful maner mockyng, lowtyng, and flowtyng them: beyng themselves in the meane season sauffe, and, as sayth the proverbe³, out of all daunger of gonneshotte.

^a termes.

^b betwene.

quicquid obsoleto uerbis non scaturit. quibusdam solum placent 23 uetera, plerisque tantum sua. Hic tam tetricus est, ut non admittat iocos, hic tam insulsus, ut non ferat sales. tam simi Simos uocat homines quidam sunt, ut nasum omnem, uelut aquam ab rabido nullo naso. morsus cane, reformident. adeo mobiles alii sunt, ut aliud sedentes probent, aliud stantes. Hi sedent in tabernis, et inter pocula de scriptorum iudicant ingenii, magnaque cum autoritate condemnant utcumque lubitum est, suis queneque Prouerbum. scriptis, ueluti capillicio uellicantes, ipsi interim tuti et, quod dici solet, ἕξω βέλους. quippe tam leues et abrasii

¹ The three attempts at tetricus may be noted.

² As we should now say, 'so strait-laced.' Robynson amplifies considerably the single word insulsus, 'tasteless.' Erasmus, under the heading 'Collo valido' in his Adagia, quotes a somewhat similar proverbial expression as used by Marius in the Senate: 'non ita latum sibi esse collum.' But the application is not the same.

³ The proverb and its cognates are given under Extra telorum iactum in the Adagia of Erasmus, ed. 1629, p. 351 a.

For whye, they be so smugge and smoethe, that they haue not so much as one heare¹ of an honest man, whereby one may take holde of them. There be moreouer some so vnkynde and vngentell, that thoughe they take great pleasure and delectation in the worke, yet for al that they can not fynde in their hartes to loue the author therof, nor to aforde hym a good worde; beyng muche lyke vncourteis, vnthankfull, and chourlishe gwestes, whiche, when they haue with good and deyntie meates well filled their bellyes, departe home, geuyng no thanks to the feaste maker. Go youre wayes, nowe, and make a costly feaste at youre owne chargeis for gwestes so deyntie mouthed, so dyuers in taste, and bisydes that of so vnkynde and vnthankfull natures².

But neuertheles, frende Peter, do I praye you with Hythlodaye as I willed you before. And as for this undique, ut ne pilum quidem habeant boni uiri, quo possint apprehendi. Sunt praeterea quidam tam ingrati, ut quum impense delectentur opere, nihilo tamen magis ament autorem; non absimiles inhumanis hospitibus, qui quum opiparo conuiuio prolixè sint excepti, saturi demum discedunt domum, nullis habitis gratiis ei, a quo sunt inuitati. I nunc³, et hominibus tam delicati palati, tam varii gustus, animi praeterea tam memoris et grati, tuis impensis epulum instrue.

Mira
collatio.

Sed tamen, mi Petre, tu illud age quod dixi cum Hythlodaeo.

¹ That is, are so close cropped and shaven (abradi), like wrestlers prepared for a conflict, that they present nothing to lay hold of, not even so much as a single hair.

² Referring to what he had said (p. 8) about consulting Hythloday. Warner's note here is to the point:— 'Sir Thomas More not only intended that this should pass for a true history, but also wished to conceal from the public that he had any hand in it as an author: and as there would be no great probability that the fiction could be long undiscovered, we may suppose he was the more solicitous to succeed in the last intention; having said so many free things about religion and government in his narrative, repugnant to the principles of the times he wrote in.'

³ Erasmus, in commenting on the proverb Inanis Opera, breaks out into a similar denunciation of the ingratitude experienced by authors. 'I nunc,' he exclaims, in a strain reminding us of the present passage, 'et hoc tam magnificum praemium tot tamque diuturnis uigiliis . . . redime' Adagia, ed. 1629, p. 330 b.

Thomas More to Peter Giles.

matter, I shalbe at my lybertie afterwardes to take newe aduisement. Howebeit, seyng I haue taken great paynes and laboure in wrytyng the matter, if it may stande with hys mynde and pleasure, I wyll, as touchinge the edition or publishing of the booke, followe the counsell and aduise of my frendes, and specially yours. Thus fare you well, ryght hartely beloued frende Peter, with yours gentell wyfe; and loue me as you haue euer done;

for I loue you better

then euer I dyd.

(. .)

postea tamen integrum erit hac de re consultare denuo. Quanquam si id ipsius uoluntate fiat, quandoquidem 25 scribendi labore defunctus nunc sero sapio, quod reliquum est de aedendo se-
 -quar amicorum consilium, at-
 -que in primis tuum. Va-le, dulcissime Petre Aegidi, cum optima con-
 -iuge; ac me ut soles a-
 -ma; quando ego te amo etiam plus quam soleo *.

* serio, A.

A fruteful /

and pleasaunt worke of the beste state of a publyque weale, and of the newe yle called Utopia: written in Latine by Syr Thomas More knyght, and translated into Englyshe by Raphe Robynson Citizein and Goldsmythe of London, at the procurement, and earnest request of George Tadlowe Citizein & Haberdassher of the same Citie.

(.:)

Printed at London
by Abraham Ayle, dwelling in Pauls churchyard at the sygne of the Lambe. Anno,

1551.

To the right

honourable, and his verie singular good maister, maister William Cecylle esquiere¹, one of the twoo principal secretaries to the kyng his moste excellent maiestie, Raphe Robynson wissheth continuance of health, with dayly increase of vertue, and honoure.

Vpon a tyme², when tidynges came too the citie of Corinthe that kyng Philippe, father to Alexander surnamed the Great, was comming thetherwarde with an armie royall to lay siege to the citie; the Corinthians, being forth with stryken with greate feare, beganne busilie and earnestly to looke aboute them, and to falle to worke of three days after Elizabeth's accession; Baron of Burghley, Feb. 25, 1571, and Lord High Treasurer in July, 1572. He died in 1598. See Dr. Jessopp's article in the Dict. of National Biography, and, for his connection with Robynson, the Introduction, above, p. lxxi.

¹ William Cecil, afterwards Lord Burghley, was born in 1520, being the only son of Richard Cecil of Burleigh in Northamptonshire. He was educated at Stamford and Grantham Schools, and afterwards at St. John's College, Cambridge, then at the height of its reputation. Owing to a romantic attachment to a sister of John Cheke, he was taken from the University before obtaining a degree, and was entered at Gray's Inn, where his portrait still hangs in the Hall. He was knighted in October, 1551; made Secretary of State, Nov. 20, 1558,

² The story which follows is taken from Lucian's Quomodo historia conscribenda sit, § 3. The readers of Sir Walter Scott will remember the description in Waverley of David Gellatly, 'idle as Diogenes at Sinope, while his countrymen were preparing for a siege.'

all handes ; some to skowre and trymme vp harneis ; some to carry stones ; some to amende and buylde hygher the walles ; some to rampiere and fortyfie the bulwarkes and fortresses ; some one thyng and some an other, for the defendinge and strengthenyng of the citie. The whiche busie labour and toyle of theirs when Diogenes the phylosopher sawe, hauing no profitable busines wherupon to sette himself on worke (neither any man required his labour and helpe as expedient for the commen wealth in that necessitie), immediatly girded about him his phylosophicall cloke, and began to rolle and tumble vp and downe hether and thether vpon the hille syde, that lieth adioyning to the citie, his great barrel or tunne, wherein he dwelled : for other dwellyng place wold he haue none.

This seing one of his frendes, and not alitell musyng therat, came to hym : And I praye the, Diogenes (quod he), whie doest thou thus, or what meanest thou hereby ? Forsothe I am tumblyng my tubbe to, (quod he) because it were no reason that I only should be ydell, where so many be working.

In semblable maner, right honorable sir, though I be, as I am in dede, of muche lesse habilitie then Diogenes was, to do any thinge, that shall or may be for the auancement and commoditie of the publike wealth of my natiue countrey ; yet I, seing euery sort and kynde of people in their vocation and degree busilie occupied about the common wealthes affaires, and especially learned men dayly putting forth in writing newe inuentions and deuises to the furtheraunce of the same ; thought it my bounden duetie to God and to my countrey, so to tumble my tubbe, I meane so to occupie and exercise meself in bestowing such spare houres, as I, beinge at the becke and commaundement of others, cold conueniently winne to me self ; that, though no commoditie of that my labour and trauaile to the publike weale should arise, yet it myght by this appeare, that myne endeuoire, and good wille hereunto was not lacking.

To the accomplishment therefore and fulfylling of this my mynde and purpose, I toke vpon me to tourne and translate out of Latine into oure Englishe tonge the frutefull and profitable boke, which sir Thomas more, knight, compiled and made of the new yle Vtopia, conteining and setting forth the best state and fourme of a publike weale: a worke (as it appeareth) written almost fourtie¹ yeres ago by the said Sir Thomas More, the authour therof. The whiche man, forasmuche as he was a man of late tyme, yea almost of thies our dayes; and for the excellent qualities, wherewith the great goodnes of God had plentyfully endowed him, and for the high place and rowme, wherunto his prince had most graciously called him, notably wel knowen, not only among vs his countremen, but also in forrein countreis and nations; therefore I haue not much to speake of him. This only I saye: that it is much to be lamented of al, and not only of vs English men, that a man of so incomparable witte, of so profounde knowlege, of so absolute learning, and of so fine eloquence, was yet neuerthesse so much blinded, rather with obstinacie then with ignoraunce, that he could not, or rather would not, see the shining light of godes holy truthe in certain principal pointes of Christian religion; but did rather cheuse to perseuer and continue in his wilfull and stubbourne obstinacie euen to the very death: this I say is a thing much to be lamented.

But letting this matter passe, I retourne again to vtopia; which (as I said befor) is a work not only for the matter that it conteineth fruteful and profitable, but also for the writers eloquent latine stiele² pleasaunt and delectable.

¹ Thirty-six, reckoning from 1515 to 1551. Sir Thomas More had been dead sixteen years when Robynson wrote.

² Erasmus was probably thinking of More's latinity, when, in his letter to Froben (above, p. lxxviii), he indulged

Which he that readeth in latine, as the authour himself wrote it, perfectly vnderstanding the same, doubtles he shal take great pleasure and delite both in the swete eloquence of the writer, and also in the wittie inuencion, and fine conueiaunce, or disposition of the matter; but most of all in the good and holsome lessons, which be there in great plenty and aboundaunce.

But nowe I feare greatly that in this my simple translation, through my rudenes and ignoraunce in our english tonge, all the grace and pleasure of the eloquence, wherwith the matter in latine is finely set forth, may seme to be vtterly excluded and lost; and therfore the frutefulness of the matter it selfe muche peradventure diminished and appayred. For who knoweth not, whiche knoweth any thyng, that an eloquent styele setteth forth and highly commendeth a meane matter; where as, on the other side, rude and vnlearned speche defaceth and disgraceth a very good matter? According as I harde ones a wise man say: A good tale euel tolde were better vntold, and an euell tale well tolde nedeth none other sollicitour.

This thing I well pondering and wayinge with me self, and also knowing and knowledging the barbarous rudenes of my translation, was fully determind neuer to haue put it forth in printe; had it not bene for certain frendes of myne, and especially one, whom aboue al other I regarded; a man of sage and discret witte, and in wordly matters by long vse well experienced, whoes name is George Tadowe¹; an honest citizein of London, and in the same citie well in speculation as to the perfection More's genius might have reached, if trained in Italy. Some of the peculiarities of his Latin style will be pointed out in the course of the notes. There are traces in it of the study of Plautus. As a rule, it is fluent and vigorous, with a great command of vocabulary. But it has not the elegance of Erasmus; and it shows occasionally the same tendency as appears in the author's English writings, to run off into inordinately long sentences.

¹ I have not been able to discover anything about this person.

accepted and of good reputation; at whoes request and instaunce I first toke vpon my weake and feble sholders the heauie and weightie bourdein of this great enterprice.

This man with diuers other, but this man chiefly (for he was able to do more with me then many other), after that I had ones rudely brought the worke to an ende ceased not by al meanes possible continually to assault me, vntil he had at the laste, what by the force of his pitthie argumentes and strong reasons, and what by hys authority, so persuaded me, that he caused me to agree and consente to the impryntyng herof. He therefore, as the chiefe persuadour, must take vpon him the daunger, whyche vpon this bolde and rashe enterpryse shall ensue. I, as I suppose, am herin clerely acquytte and discharged of all blame.

Yet, honorable Syr, for the better auoyding of enuyous and malycyous tonges, I (knowynge you to be a man, not onlye profoundly learned, and well affected towards all suche as eyther canne, or wyll, take paynes in the well bestowing of that poore talente, whyche GOD hath endued them wyth; but also for youre godlye dysposytyon and vertuous qualytyes not vnworthelye nowe placed in aucthorytye, and called to honoure), am the bolder humblye to offer and dedycate vnto youre good maystershype thys my symple woorke: partly that vnder the sauffe conducte of your protection it may the better be defended from the obloquie of them, which can say well by nothing that pleaseth not their fond and corrupt iudgementes, though it be els both frutefull and godly; and partlye that, by the meanes of this homely present, I may the better renewe and reuiue (which of late, as you know, I haue already begonne to do) the old acquayntaunce, that was betwene you and me in the time of our childhode, being then scolefellowes togethers¹: not doubting that you, for your natiue goodnes and gentelnes, will accept in good parte this poore gift, as an argument or token that mine old good wil and hartye affection towards you is not, by reason of long tract of time and separrtion of our bodies, any thinge at all quayed and diminished, but rather (I assuer you) much augmented and increased.

¹ See the Introduction, § 6.

The Epistle of the Translatour.

This verely is the chieffe cause, that hath encouraged me to be so bolde with youre maistershippe. Els truelye this my poore present is of such simple and meane sort, that it is neyther able to recompense the least portion of your great gentelnes to me, of my part vnderued, both in the time of our olde acquayntance, and also now lately again bountifully shewed ; neither yet fitte and mete, for the very basenes of it, to be offered to one so worthy as you be. But almighty god (who therfore euer be thanked) hath auanced you to such fortune and dignity, that you be of hability to accept thankfully aswell a mans good will as his gift. The same god graunte you and all yours long and joyfully to contynue in all godlynes

and prosperytye.

(. .)

The fyrste

boke of the communycā

cion of Raphaell hythlodaye concernyng the best state of a commen wealthe.

THe moste vycторыous and tryumphante Kyng of Englande, Henry the ight of that name, in all royal vertues Prince moste peerlesse, hadde of late in contra-uersie with^a the right hyghe and myghtie king of Castell¹ weightye matters, and of greate importaunce; for the debatement and final determination wherof the kinges Maieste sent me Ambassadour into flaunders, ioined in

^a with Charles.

25

SERMONIS QVEM

RAPHAEL HYTHLODAEVS VIR EXIMIVS
DE OPTIMO REIPVBLICAE STATV HA-BVI, LIBER PRIMVS, PER ILLVSTREM
VIRVM THOMAM MORVM INCLYTAE
BRITANNIARVM VRBIS LONDINI ET CIVEM ET VICECOMITEM.

26

QVVM NON EXIGVI MOMENTI negocia quaedam inuictissi-mus Angliae Rex HENRICVS, eius nominis octauus, omnibus egregii principis artibus ornatissimus, cum serenissimo Castellae principe CAROLO controuersa nuper habuisset, ad ea
tractanda componendaque oratorem me legauit in Flandriam, comitem

¹ See the Introduction, § 2.

commission with cuthebert Tunstall¹, a man doubteles owte of comparison, and whom the kinges maiestie of late, to the greate reioysyng of all men, did preferre to the office of maister of the Rolles. But of thys mans prayses I will saye nothyng; not bycause I do feare that small credence shalbe geuen to the testymony that commyth owt of a frindes mouthe, but bicause hys vertue and lernyng be greater and of more excellencye, than that I am able to prayse them; and also in all places so famous, and so perfectlye well knowne, that they nede not nor ought not of me to be praysed, onles I wolde et collegam uiri incomparabilis Cuthberti Tunstalli, quem sacris^a scriniis nuper ingenti omnium gratulatione praefecit. de cuius sane laudibus nihil a me dicetur, non quod uerear ne parum syncera fidei testis habenda sit amicitia, sed quod uirtus eius ac doctrina maior est, quam ut a me praedicari possit, tum notior ubique atque illustrior,

^a om. A.

¹ Cuthbert Tunstall, brother of the Sir Brian Tunstall who fell at Flodden, and uncle of the famous Bernard Gilpin, was born at Hackforth in Yorkshire, 1474. After studying at both the English Universities and in Padua, and holding various ecclesiastical preferments, he was made Master of the Rolls, May 16, 1516 (Brewer: Letters and Papers, vol. i. no. 1882). Hence the words of More in the text, quem . . . nuper, &c., should be rendered not 'did preferre,' but 'hath lately preferred.' Tunstall was not yet Master of the Rolls at the time of the embassy. For the amount of public business that passed through his hands as ambassador on various occasions, see the reference given above. p. xxvii, n. In 1516 he was again in Flanders, and on that occasion stood godfather to Peter Giles' infant daughter (Erasm. Epist., ed. 1642, p. 400). He was an attached friend of Erasmus as well as of More, and shared their liberal sentiments. In 1522 he was made Bishop of London, and in 1530 Bishop of Durham. He accepted the oath of supremacy to Henry VIII, but drew back, like many other good men, from the sweeping reforms under Edward VI. After being deprived of his see in that reign, and restored under Queen Mary, he finally refused to take the oath, on Elizabeth's accession, and was again deprived in 1559. The short remainder of his life he spent at Lambeth, under the kindly charge of Archbishop Parker. High praise is given to one of his works, the De arte supputandi, 1522, by a critic not very lavish of praise—the late Professor De Morgan (Arithmetical Books, 1847, p. 13). To his honour it is stated that no one suffered death for heresy in his diocese, during his administration.

seme to shew and set furth the brightenes of the sonne wyth a candell, as the Prouerbe sayth ¹.

There met vs at Bruges (for thus yt was before agreed) they whome their prince hadde for that matter appoynted commysyoners, excellent men all. The chiefe and the head of them was the Marcgraue (as they cal him) of Bruges, a right honorable man: but the wisest and the best spoken of them was George Temsice, prouoste of Casselles ²; a man not onlye by lernyng but also by nature of singuler eloquence, and in the lawes profoundely lerned; but in reasonyng, and debatyng of matters, what by his naturall witte, and what by daylye exercise, suerlye he hadde fewe fellowes. After that we hadde ones or twise mette, and vpon certeyne poyntes or artycles could not fully and throughlye agre; they for a certeyne space toke their leaue of vs, and departed to Bruxelle, there to knowe their princes pleasure. I in the meane quam ut debeat, nisi uideri uelim solem lucerna, quod aiunt, ostendere.

Proemia.

Occurrerunt nobis Brugis (sic enim conuenerat) hi, quibus a principe negotium demandabatur, egregii uiri omnes. in his praefectus Bruggensis, uir magnificus, princeps et caput erat; caeterum os et pectus Georgius Temsicius, Cassiletanus Praepositus, non arte solum uerumetiam natura facundus, ad haec iure consultissimus, tractandi uero negotii cum ingenio tum assiduo rerum usu eximius artifex. ubi semel atque iterum congressi quibusdam de rebus non satis consentiremus, illi in aliquot dies uale nobis dicto Bruxellas profecti sunt,

¹ The proverb is given by Erasmus in the form lucernam adhibere in meridie (Adag. 1629, p. 12 b). A kindred one (ib., p. 18 b) is solem adiuuare facibus. The comment on this latter by Erasmus: 'superuacuis laborat impendiis, qui solem,' &c., is curiously imitated, whether consciously or not, by Shakespeare in King John, iv. 2; where 'with taper-light | To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish' is pronounced to be 'wasteful and ridiculous excess.'

² Cassel, now a town in the Département of France, is a little north of Hazebrouck, on the line between it and Dunkirk. Its provost, Georgius a Tempseca (de Theimsecke), was a native of Bruges, and wrote a history of Artois. See König's Bibliotheca vetus et nova, 1678, p. 749 b, with a reference to Sweert, p. 276; and Gairdner's Henry VII., p. 201.

tyme (for so my busynes laye) wente streyghte thens to Antwerpe¹.

Whyles I was there abydinge, often tymes amonge other, but whyche to me was more welcome then annye other, dyd vysite me one Peter Gyles, a Citisien of Antwerpe²; a man there in hys contrey of honest reputayon, and also preferred to hyghe promotyons, worthye truelye of the highest. For it is harde to saye whether the yong man³ be in lernynge or in honestye more excellent. For he is bothe of wonderfull vertuous condytyons, and also singularlye well lerned, and towards all sortes of people excedynge gentyll; but towards his fryndes so kynde harted, so louynge, so faythfull, so trustye, and of so earnest affectyon, that yt were verye harde in any place to fynd a man, that wyth hym in all poyntes of frendshyppe maye be compared. No man can be more lowlye or courteys. No man vsithe lesse symulatyon or dyssymulatyon; in no man ys more prudente symplycyyte. Besydes this, he is in his talke and comunycatyon so merye and pleasaunte, yea, and that wythout harme, that, throughe hys gentyll intertaynement and hys swete and delectable comunycatyon, in me was greatlye abated and dymynshed the feruent desyre that I hadde principis oraculum sciscitaturi. Ego me interim (sic enim res ferebat) Antuerpian confero.

Ibi dum uersor, saepe me inter alios, sed quo non alius gratior, inuisit Petrus Aegidius, Antuerpiae natus, magna fide, et loco apud suos honesto, dignus honestissimo, quippe iuuenis haud scio doctior ne an moratior. est enim et optimus et literatissimus, ad haec animo in | omnes candido, in amicos uero tam propenso pectore, amore, fide, 27 adfectu tam sincero, ut uix unum aut alterum usquam inuenias, quem illi sentias omnibus amicitiae numeris esse conferendum. Rara illi modestia; nemini longius abest fucus; nulli simplicitas inest prudentior; porro sermone tam lepidus, et tam innoxie facetus, ut patriae to see my natyue contreye, my wyffe and my chyl dren ; whome then I dyd muche longe and couett to see, bicause that at that tyme I hadde byn more then .iiii. monythes from them¹.

¹ See the Introduction, § 2.

² See note above, p. 1.

³ At the time of More's visit he would be twenty-nine.

Upon a certeyne daye as I was herynge^a the deuyne seruyce in our ladies church², whyche is the fayrest, the moste gorgious and curyous church of buyldynge in all the cytye, and also moste frequented of people, and when the deuyne³ was done^b, was readye to goo home to my lodgyng, I chaunced to espie thys forsayde Peter talkynge wyth a certeyne straunger, a man well stryken in age, wyth a blake sonne burned face, a longe bearde, and a cloke caste homely aboute hys shoulders⁴; whom by ^a when I hadde herde.

^b the seruice beyng done.

desyderium, ac laris domestici, uxoris, et liberorum, quorum studio reuisendorum nimis quam anxie tenebar (iam tum enim plus quatuor mensibus abfueram domo) magna ex parte mihi dulcissima consuetudine sua et mellitissima confabulatione leuauerit.

Hunc quum die quadam in templo diuae Mariae, quod et opere pulcherrimum, et populo celeberrimum est, rei diuinae interfuissem, atque peracto sacro pararem inde in hospitium redire, forte colloquentem uideo cum hospite quodam, uergentis ad senium aetatis, uultu adusto, promissa barba, penula neglectim ab humero depen-

¹ This would make the time referred to in the text the middle of September, or later, as the embassy left England on May 12, 1515. See the Introduction, § 2.

² The Cathedral of Notre Dame at Antwerp, which More would see in all the freshness of its beauty, as it was not completed till the sixteenth century, though begun early in the fifteenth, has always been counted one of the most superb specimens of Gothic architecture on the Continent. It possesses two master-pieces of Rubens.

³ The word service is omitted, as seen by the reading of the second edition. Burnet renders, more naturally, 'One day, as I was returning home from mass.'

⁴ This little trait comes in so naturally, that it may be doing it wrong to give prominence to it. But the Latin word, neglectim, seems to suggest that More is here playfully bringing in a habit of his own - that of wearing his gown in a careless fashion. In this, as has happened since, he had his imitators. Ascham mentions one such, 'who, being most unlike him in wit and learning, nevertheless in wearing his gowne awrye upon the one shoulder, as Syr Tho. More was wont to do, would nedes be counted lyke unto him.'—The Scholemaster, ed. by Mayor, p. 180.

hys fauour and apparrel forthwythe I iudged to be a maryner. But when thys Peter sawe me, he cummythe to me and saluteth me^a. And as I was abowte to answeere hym: 'see you thys man?' sayeth he (and therwyth he poynted to the man that I sawe hym talkynge wyth before). 'I was mynded,' quod he, 'to brynge hym streyghte home to you.' 'He should haue bene verye welcome to me,' sayd I, 'for your sake.' 'Naye' (quod he) 'for hys owne sake, if you knewe hym; for there ys no man this daye lyuynge that can tell you of so manye strange and vnknowne peoples and contreis as this man can. And I know well that you be verye desyrous to heare of suche newes.' 'Than I coniectured not farre a mysse' (quod I) 'for euen at the fyrste syghte I iudged hym to be a maryner.' 'Naye' (quod he) 'there ye were greatlye deceaued. He hayth sayled indede, not as the maryner Palynure¹, but as the experte and prudent prince Ulisses; yea, rather as the aunicyent and sage Philosopher Plato.

'For thys same Raphaell Hythlodaye² (for thys ys hys

^a But the sayde Peter seyng me, came vnto me and saluted me.

dente, qui mihi ex uultu atque habitu nauclerus esse uidebatur. At Petrus ubi me conspexit, adit ac salutatur. respondere conantem seducit paululum, et, uides, inquit, hunc? (simul designabat eum cum quo loquentem uideram) eum, inquit, iam hinc ad te recta parabam ducere. Venisset, inquam, pergratus mihi tua causa. Imo, inquit ille, si nosset hominem, sua. Nam nemo uiuit hodie mortalium omnium, qui tantam tibi hominum, terrarumque incognitarum narrare possit historiam. quarum rerum audiendarum scio | audissimum 28 esse te. Ergo, inquam, non pessime coniectaui. Nam primo aspectu sensi hominem esse nauclerum. Atqui, inquit, aberrasti longissime: nauigauit quidem non ut Palinurus, sed ut Vlysses: imo, uelut Plato.

Nempe Raphael iste, sic enim uocatur, gentilicio nomine Hythlo-

¹ The pilot of Aeneas. Virg. Aen. iii. 202.

² The name is plainly formed from ἴθλος 'idle talk,' and δαίειν 'to distribute' (the second element being found in prefixes, as δαίτρος), as if to express, like ἰθλορρήμων, 'a teller of idle tales.' No commentator seems name) is very well lerned in the Latyne tonge; but profounde and excellent in the greke tonge^a, wherein he euer bestowed more studye than in the lattyne, because he had geuen hym selfe holye to the studye of Phylosophy. Wherof he knewe that there ys nothyng extante in the lattyne tonge^b, that is to anny purpose, sauynge a few of Senecaes and Ciceroes doinges¹. His patrimonye that he was borne vnto he lefte to his bretherne (for he is a Portugalle borne); and for the desyre that he hadde to see and knowe the farre contreys of the worlde, he joyned him selfe in compayne wyth Amerike vespuce², and in the .iii. laste voyages of thoes .iiii., that be nowe in prynte and abrode in euerye mans handes, he contynued styll in ^a language.

^b in Latine.

daeus, et latinae linguae non indoctus, et Graecae doctissimus (cuius ideo studiosior quam Romanae fuit, quoniam totum se addixerat philosophiae; qua in re nihil quod alicuius momenti sit, praeter Senecae quaedam ac Ciceronis extare latine cognouit) relicto fratribus patrimonio, quod ei domi fuerat (est enim Lusitanus) orbis terrarum contemplandi studio Americo Vesputio se adiunxit, atque in tribus posterioribus illarum quatuor nauigationum, quae passim iam leguntur, to have thought it worth while to suggest any reason for the traveller's other name being Raphael. It may have been borrowed from Raphael Volaterranus, whose voluminous Commentarii Urbani were printed at the Ascensian Press in 1511. See Freytag's Adparatus Litterarius, 1755, iii. p. 518. Vives often refers to Volaterranus as a geographical writer. Cf. De discip. (ed. 1636), p. 633. Paulus Jovius, after finding fault with his style, says that 'multum hercle debemus ingenuo gratuitoque labori.'—Elogia, 1571, p. 260. Jean Saugrain, the author of an early French translation of the Utopia, takes a different view. After defining 'Hythloday' as 'facteur de non veritables et plaisans propos,' he adds: 'lequel en propre nom il appelle Raphael, nom d'un Ange spirituel, signifiant que de son propre et bon esprit ha esté inuentée ladite Republique de nul lieu.'—La Republique d'Utopie, Lyons, 1559, p. 5.

¹ That is, works. The want of originality in Latin philosophical writings, referred to in the text; is a matter of common remark. Ascham went farther, and, after excepting Cicero, declared that 'if there be any good' in Latin and certain other languages, 'it is either lerned, or borrowed, or stolne, from some of those worthie wittes of Athens.'—Scholemaster, ed. Mayor, p. 52.

² See the Introduction, § 3.

hys companye; sauynge that in te [the] laste voyage he came not home again wyth hym. For he made suche meanes and shyfte, what by intreataunce and what by importune sute, that he gotte lycence of mayster Amerycke (thoughe it were sore agaynst his will) to be one of the .xxiiii. whyche in the ende of the laste voyage were lefte in the contrye of Gulike¹. He was therefore lefte behynde for hys mindes sake, as one that toke more thoughte and care for trauaylyng then dyinge; hauynge customablye in hys mouthe theis sayinges: He that hathe no graue ys couered wyth the skie; and, The way to heauen owte of all places is of like length and distance. Which fantasye of his (if God had not bene his better frende) he hadde suerlye bought full deere.

'But after the departynge of Mayster vespuce, when he perpetuus eius comes fuit, nisi quod in ultima cum eo non rediit. Curauit enim atque adeo extorsit ab Americo, ut ipse in his xxiii esset, qui ad fines postremae nauigationis in Castello relinquebantur. Itaque relictus est, uti obtemperaretur animo eius, peregrinationis magis quam sepulchri curioso; quippe cui haec assidue sunt in ore, Caelo tegitur qui non habet urnam², et Vndique ad superos tantundem esse uiae. Quae mens eius, nisi deus ei propitius adfuisset, nimio fuerat illi constatura.

Caeterum postquam digresso Vespucio^b multas regiones cum quin-

^a Deest in B.

^b Vespusio, A.

¹ From its being printed with a capital letter, Robynson seems to have taken the 'Castellum' of the Latin to be a proper name, instead of rendering the words 'in the fort.' See above, p. xxxix. With this idea, he rendered it 'Gulike,' because in the old dictionaries Castellum is given as the ancient name of Jülich (the French Juliers, 23 miles west of Cologne), and this is sometimes spelt Gulike, as in Cooper's Thesaurus, ed. 1584: 'Castellum, the name of a country called Juliers or Gulike.' That More's Castellum was in South America, not in Gallia Belgica, does not seem to have troubled the translator.

² The line is from Lucan, vii. 819. What follows is an adaptation of the oft-quoted saying of ANAXAGORAS of Clazomenae, when dying at Lampascus: 'Quaerentibus amicis, velletne Clazomenas in patriam, si quid accidisset, auferri: Nihil necesse est, inquit; undique enim ad inferos tantundem viae est.'—Cic. Quaestiones Tusc. I. § 104.

hadde traauyld thoroughe and abowte manye contreis, with v. of his companyons Gulykyans, at the laste by maruelous chaunce he arryued in Taprobane¹, from whens he wente to Calyquit², where he chaunced to fynde certeyne of hys contrey shyppes, wherin he retorned again into hys countreye, nothyng lesse then lokyd for.'

All thys when Peter hadde tolde me, I thankyd hym for his gentyll kyndnes, that he hadde vouchesaufed to brynge me to the speche of that man, whose communication he thought sholde be to me pleasaunte and acceptable. And there wyth I turned me to Raphaell; and when we hadde haylsede³ thone thother, and hadde spoken thies comen wordes, that be customably spoken at the fyrste metyng and acquaintance of straungers, we wente thens to my house, and there in my gardeyne, vpon a benche coueryd wyth grene torues⁴, we satte downe talking togethers.

que Castellanorum comitibus emensus est, mirabili tandem fortuna Taprobanem delatus, inde peruenit in Caliquit, ubi repertis commode
29 Lusitanorum | nauibus, in patriam denique praeter spem reuehitur.

Haec ubi narrauit Petrus, actis ei gratiis quod tam officiosus in me fuisset, ut cuius uiri colloquium mihi gratum speraret, eius uti sermone fruerer, tantam rationem habuisset, ad Raphaellem me conuerto. tum ubi nos mutuo salutassemus, atque illa communia dixissemus, quae dici in primo hospitem congressu solent, inde domum meam digredimur, ibique in horto, considentes in scamno cespitibus herbeis constrato, confabulamur.

¹ That is, Ceylon. Robynson retains the Latin name.

² It was at Calicut, 'Caliquit,' on the Malabar coast, that Vasco de Gama landed in May, 1498. 'Here a factory was formed, and after De Gama's return a large fleet followed him up and planted factories all along the coast.'—Caldecott's English Colonization, 1891, p. 17.

³ That is, hailed, or greeted. The spelling of the word recalls its connexion with the Scandinavian forms heilsa, helsa, and hilse; on which see Professor Skeat.

⁴ In the edition of 1518 there is a woodcut (p. 25) representing this garden scene. The artist seems to have taken the 'bench covered with green torves' to be a kind of crate stuffed with turf. I cannot realize to myself what More's description meant.

There he tolde vs howe that, after the departynge of vespuce, he and hys fellowes, that tarryed behynde in Gulyke, beganne by lytle and lytle, thoroughe fayre and gentle speche, to winne the loue and fauour of the people of that contreye; in so muche that within shorte space, theye dydde dwell amonges them not onlye harmelese, but also occupied^a wyth them verye famylyerly. He tolde vs also that they were in hyghe reputatyon and faouere wyth a certeyne greate man (whose name and contreye ys nowe quyte owte of my remembraunce), which of hys mere lyberalytye dyd beare the costes and charges of hym and his fyue companions, and besydes that gaue them a trustye guyde, to conducte them in theyre iorney (whyche by water was in botys and by lande in wagains), and to bring them to other princes withe verye frindlye commendatytions. Thus after manye dayes iourneis, he sayd they found townys and cytyes, and weale publyques full of people, gouerned by good and holsom lawes.

For vnder the lyne equynoctyall and of bothe^b sydes of the same, as farre as the sonne doth extend hys course, lyeth (quod he) greate and wyde desertes and wylder-

^a occupieng.

^b and bothe.

Narravit ergo nobis, quo pacto posteaquam Vespucius abierat, ipse sociique eius, qui in Castello remanserant, conueniendo atque blandiendo coeperint se paulatim eius terrae gentibus insinuare, iamque non innoxie modo apud eas, sed etiam familiariter uersari, tum principi cuidam (cuius et patria mihi et nomen excidit) grati charique esse. eius liberalitate narrabat commeatum atque uiaticum ipsi et quinque eius comitibus affatim fuisse suppeditatum, cum itineris (quod per aquam ratibus, per terram curru peragebant) fidelissimo duce, qui eos ad alios principes, quos diligenter commendati petebant, adduceret. Nam post multorum itinera dierum, oppida atque urbes aiebat reperisse se, ac non pessime institutas magna populorum frequentia republicas.

Nempe sub aequatoris linea tum hinc atque inde ab utroque latere quantum fere spatii solis orbita complectitur, uastas obiacere^a soli-

^a subiacere, A.

nesses, parched, burned and dryed vppe with continuall and intollerable heate. All thynges be hydeous, terryble, lothesome, and vnpleasaunte to be holde; all thynges owte of fasshyon and comylynes, inhabyted wyth wylde bestes and serpentes, or at the leaste wyse wyth people that be no lesse sauage, wylde, and noysome then the verye bestes themselves be. But a lytle farther beyonde that all thynges begyn by lytle and lytle to waxe pleasaunte; the ayre softe, temperate, and gentle; the ground couered wyth grene grasse; less wildnes in the bestes. At the laste shall ye come again to people, cities, and townes, wherin is contynuall entercourse and occupyinge of marchandyse and chaffare, not onelye amonge them selves and wyth theyre borderers, but also wyth marchauntes of farre contreys bothe by lande and water.

'Ther I had occasion' (sayde he), 'to go to manye contreys of^a euery syde. For there was no shyppe reddye to anye voyage or iorney, but I and my fellowes were into it verye gladlye receauyde. The shyppes that they founde fyrste were made playne, flatte, and broade in the botome, troughe wyse. The sayles were made of greate russes, or of wyckers, and in some places of lether. Afterwarde they founde shyppes wyth rydged kyeles, and ^a of omitted.

tudines perpetuo feruore torridas. Squalor undique et tristis rerum 30 facies; | horrida atque inculta omnia, feris habitata serpentibusque, aut denique hominibus, neque minus efferis quam sint beluae, neque minus noxiis. Caeterum ubi longius euectus sis, paulatim omnia mansuescere: caelum minus asperum, solum uirore blandum, mitiora animantium ingenia. tandem aperiri populos, urbes, oppida. in his assidua, non inter se modo ac finitimos, sed procul etiam dissitas gentes, terra marique commercia.

Inde sibi natam facultatem multas ultro citroque terras inuisendi, quod nulla nauis ad iter quodlibet instruebatur, in quam non ille comitesque eius libentissime admittebantur. Naves quas primis regionibus conspexerunt, carina plana fuisse narrabat; uela consutis papyris aut uiminibus intendebantur, alibi coriacea. post uero acu-sayles of canuas; yea, and shortelye after hauynge all thynges lyke owers; the shypmen also verye experte and connyng both in the sea and in the wether¹.

But he sayde that he founde greate fauour and fryndshyppe amonge them for teachynge them the feate and vse of the lode stone², whych to them before that tyme was vnknowne; and therefore they were wonte to be verye tymerous and fearefull vpon the sea, nor to venter vpon it but onlye in the somer time. But nowe they haue such a confidence in that stone, that they feare not stormy wynter; in so doynge, ferther frome care then ieopardye^a. In so muche that it is greatlye to be doubtyd, leste that thyng, thoroughe theyre owne folyshe hardynes, shall tourne them to euyll and harme, whyche at the fyrste was supposyde shoulde be to them good and commodyous.

But what he tolde vs that he sawe, in euerye contrey wheare he came, it were verye longe to declare. Nother is it my purpose at this time to make rehersall therof.

^a daunger.

minatas carinas, canabea^a uela reppererunt, omnia denique nostris similia. nautae maris ac caeli non imperiti.

Sed miram se narrabat inisse gratiam, tradito magnetis usu, cuius antea penitus erant ignari: ideoque timide pelago consueuisse sese, neque alias temere quam aestate credere. Nunc uero eius fiducia lapidis contemnunt hyemem, securi magis quam tuti; ut periculum sit, ne quae res magno eis bono futura putabatur, eadem per imprudentiam magnorum causa malorum fiat.

Quid quoque in loco se uidisse narrauit, et longum fuerit explicare, neque huius est operis institutum, et alio fortasse loco dicetur a nobis,

^a canobeia, A.

¹ Burnet, in more sounding phrase: 'the Seamen understood both Astronomy and Navigation.'

² The polarity of the magnetic needle had been known long before More wrote; but its application to the purposes of navigation does not seem to have been thought of before the fifteenth century. It was in the latter part of the same century that the capability of the ancient astrolabe, for observations at sea, was discovered.¹ See Prescott's Ferdinand and Isabella, 1886, p. 305.

But peradventure in an other place¹, I wyll speake of yt ; chyfelye suche thynges as shalbe profytable to be knowne ; as in specyall be thoese decrees and ordinaunces that he marked to be well and wyselye prouyded and enacted amonge suche peoples as do lyue to gethere in a cyuyle pollycye and good ordre. For of suche thynges dyd we busilie enqyre and demaunde of hym, and he lyke wise verye wyllinglye tolde vs of the same. But as for monsters, because they be no newes, of them we were nothyng inquisitiue. For nothyng is more easye to be founde, then be barking Scyllaes², rauenyng Celenes, and Lestrygones deuowerers of people, and suche lyke greate and vncredyble monsters ; but to fynde cytyzynes ruled by good and holsome lawes, that ys an excedyng rare and harde thyng.

praesertim quicquid ex usu fuerit non ignorari, qualia sunt in primis
 31 ea, quae apud populos usquam ciuilitate conuiuientes animaduertit, recte prudenterque prouisa^a. His enim de rebus et nos audissime rogabamus, et ille libentissime disserebat, omissa interim inquisitione monstrorum, quibus nihil est minus nouum. Nam Scyllas et Celenos^b rapaces, et Lestrygonas populiuoros³, atque eiusmodi immania portenta, nusquam fere non inuenias ; at sane ac sapienter institutos ciues haud reperias ubilibet.

^a prouisum, A.

^b celonos. A.

¹ The writer's art is noticeable in thus leading up to the Second Book, which had in fact been written first.

² Virgil, Aen. iii. 426 sqq. For Celaeno, chief of the Harpies, ib. 211. The man-eating Laestrygonians are described in Hom. Od. x. 82 sqq. : but as More has taken his previous examples from Virgil, he may have had in his mind the Culex, where Scylla and the Laestrygonians are mentioned together (vv. 329-330). More may have intended, by the slighting expressions in the text, to ridicule such travellers' tales as those in The Voiage and Travaile of Sir John Maundeville. In the Description of the West Indies by Antonio de Herrera (a translation of which is in vol. iii of Purchas's Pilgrim), p. 997, we have an account of a sea-monster higher than a caravel, and immediately after of strange birds 'with talons like Hawkes;' which may recall the Scyllas and Celaenos of the text.

³ This appears to be a word of More's own invention.

But as he markyd manye fonde and folyshe lawes in thoose newe founde lands, so he rehersyde manye^a actes and constytutyons wherby thies our cytyes, nations, contreys, and Kyngdomes maye take ensample^b, to amende theyre faultes, enormytyes and errors; wherof in another place, as I sayde, I wyll intreate. Now at thys tyme I am determyned to reherse onlye that he tolde vs of the maners, customes, lawes, and ordinaunces of the vtopians. But fyrste I wyll repete our former comunycatyon; by thoccaseyon, and, as I myghte saye, the dryfte wherof he was broughte into the mentyon of that weale publyque.

For when Raphaell hadde verye prudently touched dyuers thynges that be amysse, sume here and sume there; yea, verye manye of^c bothe partes; and agayne hadde spoken of suche wyse and prudent lawes and decrees^d as be establyshed and vsyde bothe here amonge vs and also there emonge them; as a man so connyng^e and experte in the lawes and customes of euery seuerall countreye, as though into what place soeuer he came geaste wyse, there he had lede al his life: then Peter, much meruellyng at the man: 'Surely mayster Raphaell'

^a diuers.^b example.^c on.^d wise lawes and prudente decrees.^e perfecte.

Caeterum ut multa apud nouos illos populos adnotauit perperam consulta, sic haud pauca recensuit, unde possint exempla sumi corrigendis harum urbium, nationum, gentium ac regnorum erroribus idonea, alio, ut dixi, loco a me commemoranda. Nunc ea tantum referre animus est, quae de moribus atque institutis narrabat Vtopiensium, praemisso tamen eo sermone, quo uelut tractu quodam ad eius mentionem reipublicae deuentum est.

Nam quum Raphael prudentissime recensisset alia hic alia illic errata, utrobique certe plurima, tum quae apud nos quaeue item sunt apud illos cauta sapientius, quum uniuscuiusque populi mores atque instituta sic teneret, tanquam in quencumque locum diuertisset, totam ibi uitam uixisse uideretur, admiratus^a hominem Petrus, Miror profecto, mi Raphael, inquit, cur te regi cuiquam non adiungas, quorum

^a admiratur, A. Omittit hominem B.

(quod he), 'I wondere greatlye whie you gette you not into some Kinges courte; for I am sewre there is no prynce lyuyng that wolde not be very gladde of yowe; as a man not onlye able hyghelye to delyte hym wyth youre profounde lernynge, and thys youre knowledge of contreis and peoples, but also are ^a meat to instructe him with examples, and helpe hym wyth counsell. And thus doynge yowe shal bring yowre selfe in a verye good case, and also be in ^b habyltye to helpe all youre frindes and kynsfolke ¹.'

'As concernyng my fryndes and kynsfolke' (quod he), 'I passe not greatly for them: for I think I haue suffycyentlye done my parte towards them all readye. For thies thinges that other men doo not depart from vntyll they be olde and sicke, yea, which they be then verye lothe to leaue when they can no lenger kepe, those verye same thynges dyd I, beyng not onlye lustye and in good helth, but also in the flowere of my youthe, deuyde among my fryndes and kynsfolkes; which I think wyth thys my liberalytye owghte to holde them contentyd, and not to ^a are omitted.

^b of.

neminem esse satis scio, cui tu non sis futurus uehementer gratus, utpote quem hac doctrina atque hac locorum hominumque peritia non oblectare solum, sed exemplis quoque instruere, atque adiuuare
32 consilio | sis idoneus; simul hoc pacto et tuis rebus egregie consulueris, et tuorum omnium commodis magno esse adiumento possis.

Quod ad meos attinet, inquit ille, non ualde commoueor, nempe in quos mediocriter opinor me officii mei partes impleuisse. nam quibus rebus alii non nisi senes et aegri cedunt, immo tum quoque aegre cedunt, quum amplius retinere non possunt, eas res ego non sanus modo ac uegetus, sed iuuenis quoque cognatis amicisque dispartui, quos debere puto hac mea esse benignitate contentos, neque

¹ With these same arguments Wolsey the Introduction, § 2, p. xxxi, and may have plied More, to draw him Erasmus's Letter to Hutten (Epist. into the service of Henry VIII. See ccccxlvii).

requyre nor to looke that besydes thys I shoulde for theyre sakes gyue my selfe in bondage to^a kynges.'

'Naye god forbedde^b' (quod peter), 'it is not my mynd that you shoulde be in bondage to kynges, but as a retaynoure to them at youre pleasure; whyche sewrelye I thynke ys the nygheste waye that you can deuise¹, howe to bestowe youre tyme frutefullye, not onlye for the pryuate commoditee of your fryndes, and for the general proffytte of all sortes of people, but also for the auauancemente of your selfe to a muche welthier state and condytyon then you be nowe in.'

'To a welthyer condition' (quod Raphael), 'by that meanes that my mynde standethe cleane agaynst? Nowe I lyue at lybertye, after myn owne mynd and pleasure; whiche I thynke verye fewe of thes greate states and peeres of realmes can saye. Yea, and there be ynowe of ^a vnto.

^b forbyd that.

id exigere atque expectare praeterea, ut memet eorum causa regibus in seruitium dedam.

Bona uerba, inquit Petrus; mihi uisum est non ut seruias regibus, sed ut inseruias. Hoc est, inquit ille, una syllaba plus quam seruias. At ego sic censeo, inquit Petrus, quoquo tu nomine rem appelles, eam tamen ipsam esse uiam, qua non aliis modo et priuatim et publice possis conducere, sed tuam quoque ipsius conditionem reddere feliciorum.

Feliciorum ne, inquit Raphael, ea uia facerem, a qua abhorret animus? Atqui nunc sic uiuo ut uolo, quod ego certe suspicor paucissimis purpuratorum contingere. Quin satis est eorum, qui potentum

¹ Robynson's translation is here defective, as he leaves out altogether the reply of Hythloday, Hoc est, inquit ille, &c. There is a play on the words seruias and inseruias. 'This latter,' says Hythloday, 'is only a syllable more than the former: that is, service at a court, is only short for seruitude. It is difficult to reproduce the play on the words in English. Burnet renders the whole passage thus: 'Soft and fair,' said Peter, 'I do not mean that you should be a Slave to any King, but only that you should assist them, and be useful to them.' 'The Change of the Word,' said he, 'does not alter the Matter.' 'But term it as you will,' replied Peter, 'I do not see any other Way in which you can be so useful,' &c.

them that sike^a for greate mens frindeshippes; and therefore thynke it no great hurte, if they haue not me, nor .ii. or .iii.^b suche other as I am.'

'Well, I perceyue plainlye, frind Raphaell' (quod I), 'that yowe be desierous nother of riches nor of powre. And truly I haue in no lesse reuerence and estimacyon a man that is^c of your mind, then anny of them al that be so high in pour and authoritie. But you shall doo as it becommith yow, yea, and accordinge to this wisdome and^d thys highe and free couraghe of youres, yf yowe can fynde in youre harte so to appoynte and dyspose your selfe, that you maie apply your wytte and delygence to the proffyt of the weale publyque, though it be sume what to youre owne payne and hyndraunce. And thys shall yow neuer so well doo, nor wyth so greate proffitte perfourme, as yf yowe be of sum great prynces counsell, and put in^e his heade (as I doubtte not but you wyll) honeste opynyons, and vertuous persuasyons. For from the prynce, as from a perpetuall well sprynge, cummythe amonge the people the floode of all that is good or euell. But in yowe is so perfitte lernynge, that wythowte anye experience; and amicitias ambunt, ne magnam putes iacturam fieri si me atque uno aut altero mei similibus sint carituri.

^a sue.^b iii. or iiii.^c that is omitted.^d to.^e into.

Tum ego, perspicuum est, inquam, te, mi Raphael, neque opum esse neque potentiae cupidum; atque ego profecto huius tuae mentis hominem non minus ueneror ac suspicio, quam eorum quemuis qui 33 maxime rerum | sunt potentes. Caeterum uideberis^a plane rem te atque isthoc animo tuo tam generoso, tam uere philosopho dignam facturum, si te ita compares, ut uel cum aliquo priuatim incommodo ingenium tuum atque industriam publicis rebus accommodes, quod nunquam tanto cum fructu queas, quanto si a consiliis fueris magno alicui principi, eique (quod te facturum certe scio) recta atque honesta persuaseris. nempe a principe bonorum malorumque omnium torrens in totum populum, uelut a perenni quodam fonte promanat. In te uero tam absoluta doctrina est, ut uel citra magnum rerum usum,

^a uidebaris, A.

agayne so greate experyence, that wythoute anye lernynge ; yowe maye well be anny kinges counsellour.'

'Yow be twyse deceaued, maister More' (quod he), 'fyrste in me, and agayne in the thing it selfe. For nother is in me that^a habilyte that yowe force vpon me ; and yf it were neuer so muche, yet in dysquieting myne owne quietnes I should nothing further the weale publike. For, fyrst of all, the moste parte of all princes haue more delyte in warlike matters and feates of cheualrie (the knowlege wherof I nother haue nor desire), than in the good feates of peace ; and employe muche more study howe by right or by wrong to enlarge their dominions, than howe well and peaceable to rule and gouerne that they haue all redie. Moreouer, they that be counsellours to kinges, euery one of them eyther is of him selfe so wyse in dede, that he nede^b not, or elles he thinketh him self so wise, that he will not allowe an other mans counsell ; sauing that they do shamefully¹ and flatteringly geue

^a the.

^b nedeth.

porro tanta rerum peritia, ut sine ulla doctrina egregium consiliarium cuius regum sis praestaturus^a.

Bis erras, inquit ille, mi More, primum in me, deinde in re ipsa. nam neque mihi ea est facultas, quam tu tribuis, et si maxime esset, tamen quum ocio meo negocium facerem, publicam rem nihil promoueam. Primum enim principes ipsi plerique omnes militaribus studiis (quorum ego neque peritiam habeo neque desydero) libentius occupantur quam bonis pacis artibus, maiusque multo studium est, quibus modis per fas ac nefas noua sibi regna pariant, quam uti parta bene administrent. Praeterea quicumque regibus a consilio sunt, eorum nemo est qui aut non uere tantum sapit, ut non egeat, aut tantum sibi sapere uidetur, ut non libeat alterius probare consilium ;

^a praestiturus, A.

✓¹ This word does not seem well chosen. Burnet gives the spirit of it better:—'If they court any, it is only those for whom the Prince has much personal Favour ; whom by their assent to the fond and folishe sayinges of certeyn greate men, whose fauours, bicause they be in high authoritie with their prince, by assentacion and flattering^a they labor to opteyne. And verily it is naturally geuen to all men to esteame their owne inuentyons best. So both the rauē and the ape thincke their owne yong ones fayrest¹.

Faunings and Flatteries they endeavour to fix to their own Interests.' But both translators miss the humour of 'always applauding the great man's jests, however absurd.' Erasmus, com-

'Than if a man in such a company, where some disdayne and haue despite at other mens inuentions; and some cownte their owne best; if among suche men, I saye, a man shoulde bringe furth any thinge that he hayth redde done in tymes paste, or that he hathe sene done in other places, there the hearers fare as thoughē the hole existimacion of theyr wisdome were in ieopardy to be ouerthrowen, and that euer after they should be counted for very disorderdes², onles they colde in other mens inuentions pycke out matter to reprehende and find fawt at. If all other pore helpe faile, then this is their extreame

^a flatterie.

nisi quod absurdissimis quibusque dictis assentiuntur et supparasantur³ eorum, quos ut maxime^a apud principem gratiae student assentatione demereri sibi. Et certe sic est natura comparatum, ut sua cuique inuenta blandiantur. Sic et coruo suus arridet pullus, et suus simiae catulus placet.

Quod si quis in illo coetu uel alienis inuidentium, uel praeferentium sua, aliquid afferat, quod aut aliis temporibus factum legit, aut aliis fieri locis uidit, ibi qui audiunt perinde agunt ac si tota sapientiae suae periclitaretur opinio, et post illa pro stultis plane sint habendi, nisi aliquid sufficiant inuenire, quod in aliorum inuentis uertant uitio. Si caetera destituant, tum huc confugiunt: haec nostris, inquam, placere

^a i. q. maximae.

menting on the proverb 'Simia in purpura,' ends with some remarks in a like spirit: 'Quam multos id genus simios videre est in Principum aulis; quibus si purpuram, si torquem, si gemmas detrahas, meros cerdones deprehendes.'—Adagia, 1629, p. 255 a.

^b 'Canis cani videtur pulcherrima, et bovi bos, et asina asino, et sus sui.'—Ib., p. 642.

² That is, clowns. See the Glossary.

³ Like many other words employed by More, this is borrowed from Plautus. Comp. Mil. Glor. ii. 3. 77.

refuge: "Thies thinges" (say they) "pleased oure forefathers and auncetours: wolde god wee coulde be so wise as they were." And as though they had wittely concluded the matter, and with this answeare stoppid euery mans mouthe, they sitt downe agayn. As who should saye it were a very daungerous matter, if a man in any pointe should be founde wiser then his forefathers were¹. And yet be we content to suffer the best and wittiest of their decrees to lye vnexecuted; but if in any thinge a better ordre mighte haue bene taken, than by them was, theare we take faste holde, and finde^a many fawtes. Many times haue I chaunced vpon suche prowde, lewde, ouerthwarte, and waywarde iudgementes; yea, and ones in Englande.'

'I praye yow, Syre' (quod I), 'haue yow bene in owr contrey?' 'Yea forsothe' (quod he), 'and their I tarried for the space of iiii. or v. monythes together, not longe after the insurreccion, that the westerne Englishe men made agaynst their kynge²; whych by their owne myser-

^a holde, findyng therin.

maioribus, quorum prudentiam utinam nos aequaremus. itaque hoc dicto ueluti egregia perorata re confidunt. Tanquam magnum sit periculum, siquis ulla in re deprehendatur maioribus suis sapientior. a quibus tamen, ut quicque optime consultum est, ita aequissimo animo ualere sinimus. at siqua de re potuit consuli prudentius, eam protinus ansam cupide arreptam mordicus retinemus. Itaque in haec superba, absurda ac morosa iudicia, cum saepe alibi, tum semel in Anglia quoque, incidi.

Obsecro, inquam, fuisti apud nos? Fui, inquit, atque aliquot menses ibi sum uersatus, non multo post eam cladem, qua Anglorum occidentalium ciuile aduersus regem bellum miseranda ipsorum strage

¹ It is against this 'nouitatis calumnia' that Erasmus protests forcibly in his comment on St. John i. 1. He had often been made the object of it himself. 'Sed offendit, inquit, nouitas . . . Actum, inquit, de re Christiana, posteaquam nouum habemus Euan-gelium,' &c.—See the Annotations, ed. 1535. p. 219.

² The reference is to the rising of the Cornishmen in 1497, who marched upon London, and were defeated, June 22, at Blackheath. Besides the execution of their leaders, Lord Audely, able and pitifull slaughter was suppressed and endyd. In the meane season I was much bounde and beholden^a to the righte reuerende father Jhon Morton¹, Archebishop, and cardenall of Canterburye, and at that tyme also Lord chauncellour of England; a man, maister Peter (for maister More knoweth all reddy that I wyll saye), not more honorable for his aucthority, then for his prudence and vertue. He was of a meane stature, and though streken in age yet bare he his body vpryght. In his face did shine such an amiable reuerence, as was pleasaunte to ^b beholdynge.

compressum est. Interea multum debui reuerendissimo patri Ioanni Mortonno Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo et Cardinali, ac tum quoque 35 Angliae Cancellario, uiro, mi Petre (nam Moro cognita sum narraturus) non autoritate magis quam prudentia ac uirtute uenerabili. Etenim statura ei mediocris erat, nec aetati, quanquam serae, cedens. uultus quem reuereare, non horreas. in congressu non difficilis, Flammock an attorney, and others, there was, as More says, a 'pitiful slaughter' on the field of battle.

¹ John Morton, afterwards Cardinal, was born in Dorsetshire, at Bere Regis, as is commonly said, about 1420. After studying at Balliol College, he practised for some years as an ecclesiastical lawyer. In that capacity he came under the favourable notice of Archbishop Bourchier, then Chancellor, and rose to various preferments in the Church. His attachment to the House of Lancaster brought him to Towton in 1461, whence he narrowly escaped with his life. He followed the fortunes of the exiled queen, but on his submission after Tewkesbury was kindly treated by Edward IV, who made him Master of the Rolls in 1473, and Bishop of Ely in 1479. Shakespeare has made us familiar with the scene in which he took part under Richard III. To the timely warning he sent, Henry of Richmond probably owed his escape from the machinations of that king. In 1486, as a reward for his faithful services to Henry VII, he was raised to the see of Canterbury. In 1487 he was made Lord Chancellor, and afterwards, by much solicitation on the king's part, a Cardinal. He died in 1500. The circumstance of More, as a youth, having been brought up in his household, has been mentioned before (Introd. § 1). He is naturally introduced here, in connexion with the Cornish rising; as one of the demands of the insurgents was the punishment of the king's ministers, Morton and Sir Reginald Gray. The character of him given by Sir Francis Bacon is not so favourable as More's. —See Gairdner's Henry the Seventh, 1892, p. 41; Campbell's Lives of the Lord Chancellors, 1845, i. p. 425; and the article by Mr. Archbold in the Dict. of National Biography.

beholde¹. Gentell in communycatyon, yet earneste and sage. He had greate delyte manye tymes wyth roughe speche to hys sewters to proue, but wythowte harme, what prompte wytte and what bolde sprite were in euery man. In the which, as in a vertue much agreinge with his nature, so that therewyth were not ioyned impudency, he toke greate delectatyon; and the same person, as apte and mete to haue an administratyon in the weale publike, he dyd louingly embrace. In hys speche he was fyne, eloquent, and pythye. In the lawe he had profounde knowledge; in witte he was incomparable; and in memory wonderfull excellent. Thies qualytyes, whych in hym were by nature synguler, he by learnynge and vse had made perfyte.

'The Kynge putt muche truste in hys councill: the weale publyque also in a maner leaned vnto hym, when I was there. For euen in the chiefe of hys youth² he was taken from schole into the Courte, and there passyd all hys tyme in muche trouble and busynes, and was^a continually troubled and tossed with^b dyuers mysfortunes and aduersytyes. And so by many and greate daungers

^a being.

^b tumbled and tossed in the waues of.

serius tamen et grauis. libido erat asperius interdum compellando supplicantes experiri, sed sine noxa, quid ingenii, quam animi praesentiam quisque praese ferret; qua uelut cognata sibi uirtute, modo abesset impudentia, delectabatur, et ut idoneam ad res gerendas amplectebatur. Sermo politus et efficax. Iuris magna peritia, ingenium incomparabile, memoria ad prodigium usque excellens. Haec enim natura egregia discendo atque exercendo prouexit.

Huius consilii rex plurimum fidere, multum Respublica niti (cum ego aderam) uidebatur. quippe qui ab prima fere iuuenta protinus a schola coniectus in aulam, maximis in negociis per omnem uersatus aetatem, ac uariis fortunae aestibus assidue iactatus prudentiam rerum he lerned thee^a xperience of the worlde, whyche so beyng learned can not easely be forgotten.

¹ Burnet, much better: 'his Looks begot Reverence rather than Fear.'

² Lat. ab prima fere, &c., 'wellnigh from boyhood.'

'It chaunced on a certayne daye, when I sate at hys table, there was also a certayne laye man, cunnyng in the lawes of yowre Realme. Whyche^b, I can not tel wherof takyng occasyon, began dyligently and busily^c to prayse that strayte and rygorous iustice, which at that tyme was there executed upon fellones, who, as he sayde, were for the moste part¹ .xx. hanged together vpon one gallowes. And, seyng so fewe escapyd punyshment, he sayd he coulde not chewse but greatly wonder and maruell, howe and by what euill lucke it should so cum to passe, that theues neuertheles were in euery place so ryffe and^d ranke². "Naye, Syr," quod I (for I durst boldely speake my mind before the cardynall), "maruell nothing herat ;

^a the experience.

^b Who.

^c earnestly.

^d and so.

(quae sic recepta non facile elabitur) multis magnisque cum periculis didicerat.

Forte fortuna quum die quodam in eius mensa essem, laicus quidam legum uestratium peritus aderat. is nescio unde nactus occasionem, coepit accurate laudare rigidam illam iustitiam, quae tum illic exercebatur in fures, quos passim narrabat nonnunquam suspendi uiginti in una cruce ; atque eo uehementius dicebat se mirari, cum tam pauci elaborerentur supplicio, quo malo fato fieret, uti tam multi tamen ubique grassarentur. Tum ego
36. (ausus enim sum libere apud Cardin^{alem} loqui) nihil mireris, inquam.

De legibus
parum aequis.

¹ Render: 'were being hanged in all directions, sometimes twenty on one gallows.'

² See the Introduction, § 2. To what is there said may be added the expressions put by Starkey into the mouth of Pole. If certain abuses were removed, Pole is made to say, then 'as for beggarys lusty and strong, ye, and thefys also, schold be but few or non at al of that sorte as they be now.' He thinks the root of the mischief to be 'thys multytude of seruyng men.' And it is noticeable, when taken in connexion with More's stay in the Netherlands, that he commends a method of providing for the poor observed by him at Ypres. The remnant of helpless folk, Pole says, 'easely schold be nuryschyd, after a maner lately deuysyd by the wysedome of the cytyzys of Ipar, a cyte in Flaundres, the wych I wold wysch to be put in vse wyth vs, or els some other of the same sort.'—Dialogue, as above, pp. 175, 176.

for thys punysshement of theues passeth of the lymytes^a Justyce, and is also very hurtefull to the weale publyque. For it is to extreame and crewell a punishment for thefte, and yet not sufficient to refrayne^b men from thefte. For simple thefte is not so greate an offence, that it owght to be punished with death. Nother there is any punishmente so horrible, that it can kepe them from stealyng which haue no other crafte wherby to get their liuing. Therefore in this poynte, not yow only, but also the moste part of the worlde, be lyke euyll scholemasters, whych be readyare to beate then to teache their scholers¹. For great and horryble punysshementes be appoynted for theues; whereas muche rather prouysyon should haue bene made, that there were some meanes wherby they might gett theyr lyuyng, so that no man should be dreuen to thys extreame necessitie, fyrst to steale, and then to dye." "Yes" (quod he), "this matter is well ynoughe prouyded for all ready.

^a passeth the limites of.

^b refrayne and withhold.

Nam haec punitio furum et supra iustum est et non ex usu publico. Est enim ad uindicanda furta nimis atrox, nec tamen ad refrenanda, sufficiens. Quippe neque furtum simplex tam ingens facinus est, ut capite debeat plecti, neque ulla poena est tanta, ut ab latrociniiis cohibeat eos, qui nullam aliam artem quaerendi uictus habent. Itaque hac in re non uos modo, sed bona pars huius orbis imitari uidentur malos praeceptores, qui discipulos uerberant libentius quam docent. Decernuntur enim furanti grauia atque horrenda supplicia, cum potius multo fuerit prouidendum uti aliquis esset prouentus uitae, ne cuiquam tam dira sit furandi primum, dehinc pereundi necessitas. Est, inquit

Qua ratione
feri possit, ne tam multi sint fures.

¹ Such were the 'imperiti paedagogi' of whom Pace writes: 'quales olim scio apud nos fuisse multos, et nescio an adhuc supersint. Nam is, si videt puerum ad discendum tardiozem, non nisi verberibus agendum censet, et indoctus homo verbera plus posse quam naturam credit.'—De Fructu, 1517, p. 97. This treatise of Pace is dedicated to Colet; and Lily, the first

High Master of St. Paul's School, was during his lifetime one of More's closest friends. And yet, strange to say, there are people ready to believe, or at least to propagate, the application to Lily and Colet of a story of Erasmus about barbarous flogging in school. See App. B of an edition by the present writer of Erasmus's Letter to Justus Jonas, 1883.

There be handy craftes, there is husbandry, to gett their liuinge by, if they wolde not wyllingely be nowght." "Nay" (quod I), "you shall not skape so; for, fyrste of all, I wyll speake nothyng of them that come home owte of warre^a maymede and lame, as not longe ago owte of blacke heath¹ filde, and a lityll before that owt of the warres in Fraunce²: suche (I say) as put their lyues in ieopardy for the weale publiques or the kinges sake, and by the reason of weakenes and lamenes be not able to occupy their olde craftes, and be to aged to lerne newe: of them I wyll speake nothyng, because warre lyke the tyde ebbeth and floweth^b. But let vs consydere those thinges that chauce dayly before our eyes.

"Fyrste, there is a great number of gentilmen, which can not be content to lyue ydle them selves, like dorres³, of that whiche other haue laboryd for: their tenautes ille, satis hoc prouisum: sunt artes mechanicae; est agricolatio; ex his tueri uitam liceat, ni sponte mali esse mallent. At non sic euades, inquam. Nam primum omittamus eos, qui saepe uel ab externis bellis uel ciuilibus mutili redeunt domum, ut nuper apud uos e Cornubiensi praelio, et non ita pridem e Gallico, qui uel Reipublicae impendunt membra, uel regi; quos neque pristinas artes exercere debilitas patitur, neque aetas nouam discere. hos, inquam, omittamus, quando bella per intermissas uices commeant. Ea contemplerur quae nullo die non accidunt.

^a the warres.

^b forasmuch as warres haue their ordinarie recourses⁴.

Tantus est ergo nobilium numerus, qui non ipsi modo degant ociosi, tanquam fuci laboribus aliorum, quos puta suorum praediorum colonos

¹ See the note above, p. 40.

² The intervention of Henry VII in the affairs of France was partly due to his personal obligations to the Duke of Brittany. When Francis of Brittany died, at the end of 1488, and his territory was being overrun by the French, Henry promised the aid of an English force to the orphan princess, Anne. When she had been coerced into a marriage with the French king, Charles VIII, Henry, by way of reprisals, in October, 1492, landed at Calais, and invested Boulogne. But he was secretly in treaty with Charles, and the expedition ended in a money payment.

³ That is, drones. See the Glossary.

⁴ It is difficult to believe that any one could have deliberately altered the first version, given in the text, to this.

I meane, whom they polle and shaue to the quycke by reysing their rentes¹ (for this only poynte of frugalitye do they vse, men els thoroughe their lauasse and prodigall spendynge able to bringe them selves to very beggery): thies gentlemen (I say) do not only liue in ydilnes them selves, but also carry about with them at their tayles a greate flocke or trayne of ydell and loytrynge seruyng men, whyche neuer learned any crafte wherby to get their liuinges. Thies men, as sone as theyr mayster is dead, or be sicke them selves, be incontinent thruste owte of doores. For gentlemen had rather kepe ydil persones then sycke men; and many times the dead mans heyr is not able to mainteyne so great a howse, and kepe so many seruing men, as his father dydde. Then in the meane season they that be thus destytute of seruice other starue for honger, or manfully playe the theaues. For what wolde yow haue them to do? When they haue wandred abrode so longe, untyll they haue worne threde bare their apparell, and also appayred their health, then gentlemen, because of their pale and sicke^a faces and ^a sickely.

augendis reditibus ad uiuum usque radunt: nam eam | solam frugali- 37
tatem nouere, homines alioquin ad mendicitatem usque prodigi:
uerum immensam quoque ociosorum stipatorum turbam circumferunt, qui nullam unquam quaerendi uictus artem didicere. Hi simul atque herus obierit^a, aut ipsi aegrotauerint, eiciuntur ilico. nam et ociosos libentius quam aegrotos alunt, et saepe morientis heres non protinus alendae sufficit paternae familiae. interim illi esuriunt strennue, nisi strennue latrocinentur. Nam quid faciant? Si quidem ubi errando paululum uestes ac ualetudinem attriuere, morbo iam squalidos atque

^a obiit, A.

¹ On this subject, see the Introduction, § 2. Archdeacon Crowley, half a century after, has an epigram 'Of Rente Raysers':—

'For thys thynge, he sayde, full certayne he wyste,

That wyth his owne he myghte alwayes do as he lyste.'
Select Works (E. E. T. S.), 1872, p.
46. Henry Brinklow's Complaynt of Roderyck Mors is full of the same thing.

patched cotes, wyll not take them into seruyce. And husbandmen dare not sett them a worke, knowyng well ynough that he is nothyng mete to doo trewe and faythfull seruice to a poore man wyth a spade and a mattoke, for small wages and harde fare, whyche, beyng deyntely and tenderly pampered vp in ydilnes and pleasure, was wont with a sworde and a buckeler by hys syde to iette¹ through the strete with a bragging looke, and to thynke hym selfe to good to be any mans mate."

' "Naye by saynt Marie², ser" (quod the lawier) "not so, for this kinde of men muste we make most of. For in them, as men of stowter stomackes, bolder spyrytes, and manlyer currages, then handy craftes men and plowe men be, doth consyste the hole powre, strengthe, and puisaunce of oure hoste, when we muste fight in battaill."

' "Forsothe, ser, aswel yowe myghte saye" (quod I) "that for warres sake you must cheryshe theues. For sewerly yow shal neuer lacke theues³ whyles yowe haue them.

obsiti pannis, neque generosi dignantur accipere, neque audent rustici: non ignari eum qui molliter educatus in ocio ac deliciis solitus sit, accinctus acinace ac cetra, totam uiciniam uultu nebulonico despicere et contemnere omnes prae se, haudquaquam idoneum fore, qui cum ligone ac marra, maligna mercede ac uictu parco, fideliter inseruiat pãuperi.

Ad haec ille, atqui nobis, inquit, hoc hominum genus in primis fouendum est. In his enim, utpote hominibus animi magis excelsi ac generosioris quam sunt opifices aut agricolae, consistunt uires ac robur exercitus, si quando sit confligendum bello.

Profecto, inquam ego, eadem opera dicas licet, belli gratia fouendos esse fures, quibus haud dubie nunquam carebitis, dum habebitis hos.

¹ To strut, or swagger. See the Glossary.

² A little insertion of the translator's.

³ In the Latin two terms are used, fures and latrones, both of which are rendered 'thieves' in the text, to the injury of the sense. Burnet renders more correctly:—'You may as well say,' replied I, 'that you must cherish Thieves on the Account of Wars; for you will never want the one, as long as you have the other: and as Robbers prove sometimes gallant Soldiers, so Soldiers often prove brave Robbers: so near an Alliance there is between these two Sorts of Life.'

No, nor theues be not the most false and faynt harted soldiers, nor souldiours be not the cowardliste theues: so well thees .ii. craftes agree together. But this fawte, though it be mucche vsed among yow, yet is it not peculiar to yow only, but commen also almost to all natyons. Yet Fraunce, besydes thys, is troubled and infected wyth a mucche sorer plage. The hole realme is fylled and besieged wyth hierede soldiours in peace tyme¹, yf that be peace; whyche be brought in under the same coloure and pretence, that haith persuaded yow to kype thies ydell seruyng men. For thies wysefooles and very archedoltes thought the wealth of the hole contrey herin to consist, yf there were euer in a readynes a stronge and a sewer garrison, specyallye of olde practysed soldiours; for they put no truste at all in men vnexercysed.

Quin neque latrones sunt instrennui milites, neque milites ignauissimi latronum, adeo inter has artes belle conuenit. At hoc uitium tamen frequens est uobis^a, non proprium. est enim | omnium fere ³⁸ gentium commune. Nam Gallias infestat alia praeterea pestis pestilentior: tota patria stipendiariis in pace quoque (si illa pax est) oppleta atque obsessa militibus, eadem persuasione inductis, qua uos ociosos hic ministros alendos esse censuistis; nempe quod Morosophis² uisum est, in eo sitam esse publicam salutem, si in promptu semper adsit ualidum firmumque praesidium, maxime ueteranorum: neque enim confidunt inexercitatis quicquam: ut uel ideo quaerendum eis

^a nobis, A.

¹ More exactly, 'in peace time also,' that is, as well as in war. The state of things described by More as prevailing in France had come in with the discontinuance of levies according to the old feudal tenure. These had given place, says Hallam, 'in an evil hour for the people, and eventually for sovereigns, to contracts with mutinous hirelings, frequently strangers, whose valour in the day of battle inadequately redeemed their bad faith and vexatious rapacity. France, in her calamitous period under Charles VI and Charles VII, experienced the full effects of military licentiousness.'—Middle Ages, ed. 1869, p. 145. Charles VII in 1444 had tried to remedy this by the establishment of regular French troops; but More writes as if the evil were still unabated in his time.

² A Greek word, taken by More from Lucian. It occurs in the Alexander, § 40.

And therefore they must be fayne^a to seke for warre, to thende they maye euer haue practysed souldyours and cunnyng mansleers; leaste that (as it is pretilie sayde of Saluste¹) their handes and their myndes thorough ydylnes or lacke of exercyse shoulde waxe dull.

“But howe pernycyous and pestylente a thyng it is to maynteyne suche beastes, the Frenche men by there owne harmes haue learned; and the examples of the Romaynes, Carthaginiens, Siriens and of many other contreys, do manyfestly declare². For not only the empire, but also the fieldys and cityes of all thies, by diuers occasyons haue bene ouerruned and destroyed of their owne armies before hand had in a reddines³. Now how vnecessary a thyng thys is, hereby it maye appere: that the Frenche souldiours, whyche from their youthe haue byne practysed and vrede^b in feates of armes, doo not cracke nor auauce them selves to haue verye often gotte the vpperhande and masterye of your newe made and vnpractysed

^a forced.

^b inured.

bellum sit, ne imperitos habeant milites, et homines iugulandi gratis, ne (ut habet facete Salustius) manus aut animus incipiat per otium torpescere.

At quam sit perniciosum huiusmodi beluas alere, et Gallia suo malo didicit, et Romanorum, Carthaginensium, ac Syrorum, tum multarum gentium exempla declarant, quorum omnium non imperium modo sed agros quoque atque adeo urbes ipsas parati ipsorum exercitus aliis atque aliis occasionibus euerterunt. Quam uero non magnopere necessarium, uel hinc elucescit, quod ne Galli quidem milites armis ab unguiculis exercitatissimi cum euocatis comparati uestris, admodum saepe gloriantur superiores sese discessisse, ut ne

Quam perniciem adferant perpetua militum praesidia.

¹ Sall. Cat. xvi, ‘Ne per otium torpescerent manus aut animus.’

² Lat. parati exercitus, ‘standing armies.’ More had probably in his mind the Janizaries and Mamelukes: of the latter of whom Gibbon writes that ‘the rage of these ferocious animals, who had been let loose on the strangers, was provoked to devour their benefactor.’—Decline and Fall, ch. lix, sub fin.

³ That is, previously prepared.

soldiours¹. But in thys poynte I wyll not vse manye wordes, leaste perchaunce I maye seme to flatter yow. No nor those same handy craft men of yours in cities, nor yet the rude and vplandishe ploughemen of the contrey, are not supposed to be greatly affraid of your gentilmens ydill seruing men, onles it be suche as be not of body or stature correspondent to theyr strenghte and currage; orels whose bolde stomackes be dyscouraged thoroughe pouertye. Thus yowe maye see, that yt ys not to be feared leaste they shoulde be effemynatede they yf^a were broughte vppe in good craftes and laborsome wourkes, whereby to gett theyre lyuyng; whose stowte and sturdye bodyes (for gentlemen vouchesauffe to corrupte and spill none but picked and chosen men) nowe, other by reason of rest and ydilnes, be brought to weakenes, orels by to easy and womanlye exercises be made feble and vnable to endure hardenes. Trewly howe soeuer the case stondeth, thys me thinketh is nothyng

^a Leg. yf they.

quid dicam amplius, ne praesentibus uidear adblandiri uobis. Sed nec uestri illi uel opifices urbici, uel rudes atque agrestes agricolae ociosos generosorum stipatores creduntur ualde pertimescere, nisi aut hi quibus ad uires atque audaciam corpus contigit ineptius, aut quorum animi uis | inopia rei familiaris infringitur. adeo periculum nullum 39 est, ne quorum ualida et robusta corpora (neque enim nisi selectos dignantur generosi corrumpere) nunc uel elanguescit^a ocio, uel negociis prope muliebribus emolliuntur, iidem bonis artibus instructi ad uitam, et uirilibus exercitati laboribus effoeminentur. Certe utcunq; sese haec habet res, illud mihi nequaquam uidetur publicae rei conducere,

^a elanguescunt, B., recte.

¹ More is here using the language of a patriot. During the first half of the fifteenth century, at any rate, the English army, unlike the national levies of other countries, was 'an enlisted, picked, drilled, and highly effective service.'— See p. xxi of Professor a veyleable to the weale publique, for warre sake¹, whyche yowe neuer haue but when yow wyll your selves, to kepe and mainteyn an vnumerable flocke of that sort of men, that be so troublesome and noyous in peace; wherof yow owght to haue a thowsande times more regard then of warre.

J. E. Thorold Rogers' edition of Gascoigne's Liber Veritatum, 1881. For More's epigrams in a like strain, on the taking of Tournai in 1513, and in answer to Germain de Brie, see J. H. Marsden's Philomorus, 1878, pp. 73-78.

“ But yet this is not onlye the² necessary cause of stealing. There is an other which as I suppose is proper and peculiare to yow Englishe men alone.” “ What is that ? ” quod the Cardenall. “ Forsoth^a ” (quod I), “ your shepe³, that were wont to be so myke and tame, and so smal eaters, now, as I heare saie, be become so greate deuouwerers, and so wylde, that they eate vp and swallow down the very men them selves. They consume, destroy, and deuoure hole fieldes, howses, and cities. For looke in

^a forsoth, my lorde.

in euentum belli, quod nunquam habetis, nisi quum uultis, infinitam eius generis turbam alere, quod infestat pacem, cuius tanto maior haberi ratio quam belli debeat.

Neque haec tamen sola est furandi necessitas. Est alia magis, quantum credo, peculiaris uobis. Quenam est ea? inquit Cardinalis. Oues, inquam, uestrae, quae tam mites esse, tamque exiguo solent ali, nunc (uti fertur) tam edaces atque indomitae esse coeperunt, ut homines deuorent ipsos; agros, domos, oppida uastent ac depopulentur. Nempe quibus cunque regni partibus nascitur lana tenuior, ¹ ‘For the sake of war;’ on account of war.

² That is, ‘not the only.’

³ Complaints of the injury done to agriculture in England by the increase of sheep-farming were no new thing in More’s day, and continued for many years after. In a tract, of which the date is set down to 1550-3, entitled The Decay of England by the great multitude of shepe, edited by J. Meadows Cowper, six ‘prouerbes’ are adduced by way of reasons to show that ‘shepe and shepemaisters doeth cause skantytte of corne.’ The six refer to the increased price of (1) wool itself, from the great exportation, (2) mutton, (3) beef, (4) corn, (5) white meat, (6) eggs. In the Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum, which appeared in the same year as the Utopia, the number of sheep in England is referred to as proverbial (ed. 1557, leaf N. 6).

‘Salutes uobis plures

Quam sunt in Polonia fures

Oues in terra Angliae.’

See more in the Introduction, § 2.

what partes of the realme doth growe the fynyst, and therefore dearist woll, there noble men and gentlemen, yea, and certeyn Abbottes, holy men god wote^a, not contenting them selves with the yearely reuennues and profyttes that were wont to grow to theyr forefathers and predecessours of their landes, nor beyng content that they liue in rest and pleasure, nothyng profytyng, ye, muche noyinge the weale publike, leaue no grounde for tyllage; they enclose all in^b pastures; they throw downe houses; they plucke downe townes; and leaue nothing stondyng but only the churche, to make of it^c a shepewhse¹. And, as thoughe yow loste no small² quantity of grounde by forestes, chases, laundes, and parkes; those good holy³ men turne all dwellinge places and all glebe lande into desolation and wildernes.

^a no doubt.^b into.^c to be made.

atque ideo preciosior, ibi nobiles et generosi, atque adeo Abbates aliquot, sancti uiri, non his contenti redditibus fructibusque annuis, qui maioribus suis solebant ex praediis crescere; nec habentes satis, quod ociose ac laute uiuentes nihil in publicum prosint, nisi etiam obsint; aruo nihil relinquunt, omnia claudunt pascuis, demoliuntur domos, diruunt oppida, templo duntaxat stabulandis suis relicto et tanquam parum soli perderent apud uos ferarum saltus ac uiuaria, illi | 40 boni uiri habitationes omnes, et quicquid usquam est culti, uertunt in solitudinem.

¹ See the Introduction, § 2. A passage in one of the Ballads from Manuscripts, ed. by Furnivall (E. E. T. S.), i. p. 97, furnishes a close parallel to the text:—

‘The townes go down, the land
decayes;

Gret cornefeyldes, playne layes;

Gret men makithe now a dayes

A shepecott in the churche.’

² This does not give the force of parum: ‘as if Forests and Parks had swallowed up too little of the Land’ (Burnet). Robynson appears to have used ‘laundes’ in the French meaning of the word. The Latin should perhaps be simply rendered ‘preserves and deer parks.’

³ The uncalled-for addition of this epithet by the translator seems intended to point the reproach chiefly against the heads of religious houses, the Abbates aliquot, who were called sancti viri just above. But there is nothing to show that they were more to blame in this respect than other great landlords. It is easy to understand that, after the civil wars of the

“Therefore, that one couetous and vnsatiabie cormaraunte and veye plage of his natyue contrey may compasse abowte and inclose many thousand acres of grounde to gether within one pale or hedge, the husbandmen be thrust owte of their owne; or els other by coueyne or fraude, or by vyolent oppression, they be put besydes it, or by wronges and iniuries they be so weried that they be compelled to sell all. By one meanes therfore or by other; other by howke or crooke, they must nedes departe awaye, pore, sylie, wretched soules; men, women, husbandes, wyues, fatherles chylde, widdowes, wofull mothers with their yonge babes, and their hole housholde smal in substance, and much in nombre, as husbandrie requireth many handes. Awaye they trudge, I say, out of their knowen and accustomed howses, fyndyng no places to rest in. All their housholde stuffe, whiche is veye lytle worth, though it myght well abyde the sale¹, yet beyng sodeynely thrust out, they be constrayned to sell it for a thyng of nought. And when they haue, wanderynge about, sone

Ergo ut unus helluo, inexplebilis ac dira pestis patriae, continuatis agris, aliquot millia iugerum uno circumdet septo, eiiciuntur coloni quidam. suis etiam aut circumscripti fraude aut ui oppressi exuuntur, aut fatigati iniuriis adiguntur ad uenditionem. Itaque quoquo pacto emigrant miseri, uiri, mulieres, mariti, uxores, orbi, uiduae, parentes cum paruis liberis, et numerosa magis quam diuite familia, ut multis opus habet manibus res rustica; emigrant, inquam, e notis atque assuetis laribus, nec inueniunt quo se recipiant; supellectilem omnem, haud magno uendibilem etiam si manere possit emptorem, quum extrudi necesse est, minimo uenundant. id quum breui errando last century their lands might in many cases have become less productive, for want of proper cultivation, and themselves embarrassed with debt; anxious, therefore, to find some way of making their estates more profitable. —See Gasquet's Henry VIII and the spent that^a, what can they^b els do but steale, and then iustelye, God wote^c, behanged, or els go about a beggyng? And yet then also they be cast in prison as vagaboundes, because they go about and worke not; whom no man will set a worke, though they neuer so willingly offer^d them selves therto. For¹ one shepherde or heard man is ynough to eate vp that grounde with cattel, to the occupying wherof about husbandrye many handes were requysyte.

English Monasteries, 1888, vol. i. ch. 1.

¹ This appears to mean, 'though it would bear keeping;' but the sense of the Latin is, as Burnet gives it: 'which could not bring them much Money, even tho' they might stay for a Buyer.'

“And this is also the cause that^e victualles be nowe in many places dearer. Yea, besydes this the pryce of wolle is so rysen that poore folkes, whiche were wont to worke it and make cloth of it^f, be nowe able to bye none at all². And by thys meanes verye manye be fayne^g to forsake worke, and to gyue them selves to ydelnes. For after ^a wandered abrode tyll that be spent.

^b they then.

^c pardy.

^d proffer.

^e why.

^f therof.

^g forced.

insumpserint, quid restat aliud denique quam uti furentur, et pendeant iuste scilicet, aut uagentur atque mendicent? Quanquam tum quoque uelut erronei coniciuntur in carcerem, quod ociosi obambulent, quorum operam nemo est qui conducat, quum illi cupidissime offerant. Nam rusticae rei, cui assueuerunt, nihil est quod agatur, ubi nihil seritur. Si quidem unus opilio atque bubulcus sufficit ei terrae depascendae pecoribus, in cuius cultum, ut sementi faciendae sufficeret, multae poscebantur manus.

Atque hac ratione fit ut multis in locis annona multo sit carior. Quin lanarum quoque adeo increuit precium, ut a tenuioribus, qui pannos inde solent apud uos conficere, prorsus emi non possint, atque ea ratione | plures ab opere ablegantur in ocium. Nam post 41

¹ Before this sentence Robynson has entirely left out one, which Burnet translates: ‘For there is no more Occasion for Country Labour, to which they have been bred, when there is no Arable Ground left.’

² To the authorities on this subject quoted in the Introduction, § 2, add Becon’s Jewel of Joy, quoted by the editor of Starkey’s Life and Letters, as before, p. lxxvi: ‘Those beastes which were created of God for the nouryshment of man do nowe deuoure man . . . Since they [‘gredy gentylmen’] began to be shepc-maysters and feders of cattell, we neyther had vyttayle nor cloth of any resonable pryce.’

that so muche grounde was inclosed for pasture, an infinite multitude of shepe died of the rotte¹, suche vengauce God toke of their inordinate and vnsaciabie couetuousnes, sendyng amonge the shepe that pestiferous morreyn, which much more iustely should haue fallen on the shepe-masters owne heades. And though the nombre of shepe increase neuer so fast, yet the pryce falleth not one myte, because there be so fewe sellers². For they be almoste all commen into a fewe riche mens handes, whome no neade driueth to sell before they lust; and they luste not before they may sell as deare as they lust. Now the same cause bryngeth in licke dearth of the other kindes of cattell; yea, and that so much the more, bycause that after farmes pluckyd downe, and husbandry decayed, ther is no man that passyth for the breadyng of yonge stoores. For thees ryche men brynge not vp the yonge ones of greate cattell as they do lambes. But first they bye them aucta pascua infinitam ouium uim absumpsit tabes, uelut eorum cupiditatem ulciscente deo, immissa in oues lue, quam in ipsorum capita contortam esse fuerat iustus. Quod si maxime increscat ouium numerus, precio nihil decrescit tamen; quod earum, si monopolium appellari non potest, quod non unus uendit, certe oligopolium est. Reciderunt enim fere in manus paucorum, eorundemque diuitum, quos nulla necessitas urget ante uendendi quam libet, nec ante libet quam liceat quanti libet. Iam caetera quoque pecorum genera, ut aequae cara sint, eadem ratio est, atque hoc etiam amplius, quod dirutis uillis, atque imminuta re rustica, non sunt qui foeturam curent. Neque enim diuites illi, ut ouium, sic etiam armentorum foetus educant: sed

¹ I am not sure to what year in particular More here refers. The extreme wetness of 1506 must have been injurious to cattle. About that time we read of a great murrain among cattle in Germany and France. See Hecker's Epidemics, tr. by Babington, p. 204.

² Here again Robynson curtails his rendering of the Latin. More makes an antithesis between monopolium and oligopolium. We have 'monopoly,' but not 'oligopoly' (the sale by a few), and so cannot preserve the point of the sentence. Burnet renders: 'Tho' they [the sheep] cannot be called a Monopoly, because they are not engrossed by one Person, yet they are in so few Hands, and these are so rich, that,' &c.

abrode very chepe, and afterward, when they be fattede in their pastures, they sell them agayne excedyng deare. And therfor (as I suppose) the hole incommoditie herof is not yet felte. For yet they make dearth only in those places where they sell. But when they shall fetche them away from thens wheare they be bredde, faster then they can be brought vp, then shall there also be felte great dearth, when stoore begynnyth to fayle their^a whear the ware ys bought.

“Thus the vnreasonable couetousnes of a fewe hath turned that thyng to the vtter vndoing of your Ilande, in the whiche thyng the chiefe felicitie of your realme dyd consist. For this great dearth of victualles causeth euery man^b to kepe as lytle houses and as small hospitalitie as he^c possible maye, and to put away their seruauntes: whether, I praye you, but a beggyng? or els, whiche thies gentle bloodis and stoute stomakes wyll soner set theyr myndes vnto, a stealinge?

“Nowe, to amende the matters, to this wretched beggerye and miserable pouertie is ioyned great wantonnes, importunate superfluytie, and excessiue ryote¹. For not only

^a stoore beginning there to faile.

^b causeth men.

^c they.

aliunde macra empta uili, posteaquam suis pascuis pinguerint, magno reuendunt. Ideoque, sicuti reor, nondum sentitur totum huius rei incommodum. Nempe adhuc his modo locis reddunt cara, ubi uendunt. caeterum ubi aliquandiu celerius extulerint illinc quam nasci possint, tum demum ibi quoque paulatim decrescente copia, ubi coemuntur, necesse est hic insigni laboretur inopia.

Ita qua re uel maxime felix haec uestra uidebatur insula, iam ipsam paucorum improba cupiditas uertit in perniciem. Nam haec annonae caritas in causa est, cur quisque quam possit plurimos e familia dimittat; quo, quaeso, nisi mendicatum, aut, quod generosis animis 42 persuadeas facilius, latrocinatum?

Quid quod ad miseram hanc egestatem atque inopiam adiungitur importuna luxuries. Nam et ministris nobilium, et opificibus, et ipsis gently mens seruauntes, but also hand y craft men, yea, and almoste the ploughemen of the countrey, with all other sortes of people, vse muche straunge and prowde newe fanglenes in their apparrell, and to muche prodigal riotte and sumptuous fare at their table. Nowe bawdes, qweynes, hoores, harlottes, strumpettes, brothelhouses, stewes, and yet an other stewes, wine tauernes, ale houses, and tipling houses, with so many noughty lewde and vnlawfull games, as dice, cardes, tables¹ tennyes, bolles, coytes, do not al thys sende the haunTERS of them streyght a stealyng when theyr money is gone ?

¹ These three phrases are all used to render importuna luxuries.

“Caste out thies pernycious abomynacyons; make a lawe that they whyche plucked downe fermes and townes of husbandrye, shall buylde them vp agayne^a or els yelde and vprender the possessyon of them^b to suche as wyll goo to the coste of buyldyng them anewe². Suffer not thies ryche men to bye vp all, to ingrosse and forstalle, propemodum rusticis, et omnibus denique ordinibus, multum est insolentis apparatus in uestibus, nimius in uictu luxus. Iam ganea, lustra, lupanar, et aliud lupanar³, tabernae uinariae, ceruisiariae, postremo tot improbi ludi, alea, charta, fritillus, pila, sphaera, discus, an non haec celeriter exhausta pecunia recta suos mystas mittunt aliquo latrocinatum ?

^a reedifie them.

^b therof.

Has perniciosas pestes eiicite, statuite ut uillas atque oppida rustica aut hi restituant qui diruere, aut ea cedant reposituris atque aedificare uolentibus. Refrenate coemptiones istas diuitum, ac uelut monopolii

¹ Lat. fritillus, which properly meant a dice-box, but seems sometimes to have been applied to the board, or 'table.' Of some of the games here mentioned More once spoke less harshly. 'To cast a coyte, a cokstele, and a ball' was one of the child's accomplishments in his pageant. See the English Works, leaf iii, and, for the subject of early English games, Brand's Popular Antiquities, 1841, ii. pp. 233 sqq.

² See the Introduction, § 2, p. xxxvi.

³ If there be no error in the text, the repetition may be meant to convey the thought of Prov. xxiii. 35, 'I will seek it yet again.' Burnet's idea seems to be, that the 'tabernae,' &c., which follow, are in fact the 'aliud lupanar': 'You have also many infamous Houses, and, besides those that are known, the Taverns and Ale-houses are no better.'

and with theyr monopolye to kepe the market alone as please them. Let not so manye be brought vp in ydlenes; lett husbandrye and tyllage be restored agayne^a; let clothe workyng be renewed; that there maye be honest labours for thys ydell sorte to passe theyre tyme in profytable, whyche hytherto other pouertye hathe caused to be theues, or elles nowe be other vagabondes, or ydell seruyng men, and shortelye wylbe theues. Dowteles, oneles yowe fynde a remedye for thyes enormytes, yowe shall in vayne auuance your selves of executinge iustice vpon fellones. For this iustice is more beautyfull then iuste^b or profytable¹. For by sufferyng your youthe wantonlye and viciouslye to be brought vp, and to be infected euen from theyr tender age by lytle and lytle wyth vyce; than a goddes name to be punyshed, when they commytte the same faultes after they be commen^c to mannes state, whiche frome ther youthe they were euer lyke to doo: in thys pointe, I praye yowe, what other thyng doo yowe, then make theues, and then punyshe them?"

^a agayne omitted.

^b is more beautiful in apperaunce, and more flourishyng to the shewe, then either iuste.

^c after being come.

exercendi licentiam. Pauciores alantur ocio, reddatur agricolatio, lanificium instauretur, ut sit honestum negocium, quo se utiliter exerccat ociosa ista turba, uel quos hactenus inopia fures fecit, uel qui nunc erroneos aut ociosos sunt ministri, fures nimirum utriusque futuri. Certe nisi his malis medemini, frustra iactetis exercitam in uindicanda furta iusticiam, nempe speciosam magis quam aut iustam aut utilem. Siquidem quum pessime sinitis educari, et mores paulatim ab teneris annis corrumpi, puniendos uidelicet tum demum quum ea flagitia uiri designent², quorum spem de se perpetuam a pueritia usque praeberant, quid aliud, quaeso, quam facitis fures, et iidem plectitis?

¹ Robynson (see his later version) struggles with this sentence. Burnet, more neatly: 'which tho' it may have the Appearance of Justice, yet in itself is neither just nor convenient.'

² This use of the verb, for 'to commit,' is found in the comedians. Comp. Ter. Adelphi, i. 2. 7, 'modo quid designavit,' and the commentators there.

'Nowe as I was thus speakyng, the Lawier beganne to make hym selfe readye to aunswere, and was determyned wyth hym selfe to vse the common fassyon and trade of disputers, whyche be more dylygent in rehersyng then aunsweryng, as thynking the memorye worthye of the chiefe prayse. "In dede syr" (quod he) "yow haue sayd well, beinge but a straunger, and one that myght rather here somme thyng of thyes matters, then haue anye exacte or perfecte knowledge of the same, as I will incontinent by open proffe make manifest and playn. For firste I wyll reherse in ordre all that yow haue sayde; then I wyll declare in what thyng^a yowe be deceaued, through lacke of knowledge, in all our fassions, maners and customes; and laste of all I wyll aunswere to^b your argumentes, and confute them euery one. Fyrste therefore I wyll begynne where I promysed. Foure thynges yowe semed to me"—"Hold your peace" (quod the Cardynall¹), "for by lyke^c yowe wyll make no shorte aunswere, whiche make such a begynning; wherfore at thys tyme yowe shall not take the paynes to make youre aunswere, but

^a wherin.^b to omitted.^c it appeareth that.

- 43 Iam me haec loquente iuris ille consultus inten[tus] interim se ad dicendum composuerat, ac statuerat secum modo illo solenni disputantium uti, qui diligentius repetunt quam respondent; adeo bonam partem laudis ponunt in memoria. Belle, inquit, dixisti profecto, quum sis uidelicet hospes, qui magis audire his de rebus aliquid potueris, quam exacte quicquam cognoscere: id quod ego paucis efficiam perspicuum. Nam primum ordine recensebo quae tu dixisti; deinde ostendam quibus in rebus imposuit tibi nostrarum rerum ignoratio; postremo rationes tuas omnes diluam atque dissoluam. Igitur, ut a primo quod sum pollicitus exordiar, quatuor mihi uisus es—Tace, inquit Cardinalis: nam haud responsurus paucis uideris, qui sic incipias. Quamobrem leuabimus in praesenti te hac respondendi molestia, seruaturi tamen integrum id munus tibi in

Expressit morem
ei Cardinali familiarem, interpellandi si quis
loquacius ageret.

¹ The marginal note in the Latin calls attention to this habit of Cardinal Morton. of interrupting too talkative persons.

kepe it to youre nexte meatynge, whiche I would be ryght gladde that it myght be euen to morrowe nexte (onles other yowe or mayster Raphaell haue any earnest lette).

“ But now, maister Raphaell, I woulde very gladly heare of yow, whie yow thynke thefte not worthy to be punished with death : or what other punyshment yow can deuise more expedient to the weale publike. For I am sewer yowe are not of that mynde, that yowe woulde haue thefte escape vnpunished. For if now the extreme punishment of death cannot cause them to leaue stealyng, then if ruffians and rubbers shoulde be sewer of their lyues, what violence, what feare were able to holde their handes from robberyng, whiche would take the mitigation of the punishment as a verie peruocation to the mischief?”

“ Suerly my lorde ” (quod I) “ I thynke it no^a right nor iustice that the losse of money should cause the losse of mans lyfe. For myne opinion is that all the goodes in the worlde are not able to counteruayle mans lyfe. But if they wold thus say : that the breaking of iustice, and the transgression of the lawes is recompensed with this punishment, and not the losse of the money ; then why maye not thys extreame^b iustice wel be called extreme^c iniurie ?

^a not.

^b extreme and rigorous.

^c plaine.

proximum congressum uestrum, quem (nisi quid impediatur aut te aut Raphalem hunc) crastinus dies uelim referat.

Sed interim abs te, mi Raphael, perquam libenter audierim, quare tu furtum putes ultimo supplicio non puniendum ; quamue aliam poenam ipse statuas, quae magis conducatur in publicum. Nam tolerandum ne tu quidem sentis. At si nunc per mortem quoque tamen in furtum ruitur, proposita semel uitae securitate, quae uis, quis metus potest absterre maleficos ; qui mitigatione supplicii uelut praemio quodam ad maleficium se inuitatos interpretarentur ?

Omnino mihi uidetur, inquam, | pater benignissime, homini uitam 44 eripi propter ereptam pecuniam prorsus iniquum esse. Siquidem cum humana uita ne omnibus quidem fortunae possessionibus paria fieri posse arbitror. Quod si laesam iustitiam, si leges uiolatas, hac rependi poena dicant, haud pecuniam : quidni merito summum illud

For neither so^a cruel gouernaunce, so streyte rules, and vnmercyfull lawes¹ be allowable, that if a small offence be commytted, by and by the sworde shoulde be drawen; nor so stoycall² ordinaunces are to be borne wythall, as to counte all offences of suche equalitie, that the kyllinge of a man, or the takynge of hys money from hym, were bothe a³ matter; and the one no more heynous offence then the other: betwene the whyche two, yf we haue annye respecte to equitie, no symylytude or equalitye consysteth. God commaundeth vs that we shall not kyll. And be we then so hastie to kyll a man for takynge a lytle money? And yf annye man woulde vnderstande kyllinge, by this commaundement of God, to bee forbydden after no larger wyse then mans constitutions defyneth^b kyllinge to be lawfull, then whye maye it not lykewyse, by mannes constitutions, be determyned after what sorte hooredome, fornication, and periurye maye be lawfull? For where as by the permission of God no ius summa uocetur iniuria? Nam neque legum probanda sunt tam Manliana imperia, ut sicubi in leuissimis parum obtemperetur, illico stringant gladium; neque tam Stoica scita, ut omnia peccata adeo existiment paria, uti nihil iudicent interesse, occidatne aliquis hominem, an nummum ei surripiat, inter quae (si quicquam aequitas ualet) nihil omnino simile aut affine. Deus uetuit occidi quenquam; et nos tam facile occidimus ob ademptam pecuniolam? Quod si quis interpretetur, illo dei iussu interdictam necis potestatem, nisi quatenus humana lex declaret occidendum, quid obstat quo minus homines eodem modo constituent inter se, quatenus stuprum admittendum sit, adulterandum, peierandum?

^a For so cruell . . . be not.

^b defyne.

Manliana imperia, ex Liuio.

¹ This is a paraphrase of the Latin, legum . . . Manliana imperia; an expression borrowed from Livy, iv. 29, where inexorable decrees are called Manliana imperia. For L. Manlius, who gained the surname of Imperiosus, see Livy, vii. 3.

² For this oft-quoted paradox of the Stoics, omnia peccata esse paria, with which Cicero makes merry in the Pro Murena, see Dissert. xxi. in Justus Lipsius' Manuductio ad Stoicam Philosophiam, 1644.

³ Like the Scotch ae, 'one.'

man hathe power to kylle nother hym selfe, nor yet anny other man¹; then yf a lawe made by the consente of men concernynge slaughter of men oughte to be of suche strengthe, force, and vertue, that they whyche contrarye to the commaundement of God haue kylled those, whome thys constitucion of man commaunded to be kylled, be cleane quyte and exempte owte of the bondes and daunger of Goddes commaundemente; shall it not then by thys reason followe that the powre of Goddes commaundement shall extende no further then mannes lawe dothe defyne and permytte? And so shall it come to passe, that in lyke manner mans constitucions in al thynges shal determyne howe farre the obseruation of all Goddes commaundementes shall extende. To be shorte, Moyses lawe, though it were vngentle and sharpe, as a lawe that was gyuen to bondmen²; yea, and them verye obstinate, stubborne, and styf necked; yet it punnyshed thefte by the purse, and not wyth deathe. And let vs not thynke that God in the newe

Siquidem quum deus non alienae modo, uerum etiam suae cuique mortis ius ademerit, si hominum inter se consensus de mutua cede, certis placitis consentientium, adeo debet ualere, ut illius praecepti uinculis eximat suos satellites, qui sine ullo exemplo dei eos interemerint quos humana sanctio iussit occidi: an non hoc pacto praeceptum illud dei tantum iuris est habiturum, quantum humana iura permiserint? | ac fiet nimirum ut ad eundem modum omnibus in rebus 45 statuant homines, quatenus diuina mandata conueniat obseruari. Denique lex Mosaica, quanquam inclemens et aspera (nempe in seruos, et quidem obstinatos, lata), tamen pecunia furtum haud morte

¹ Hythloday is made to argue here against the infliction of capital punishment, as under no circumstances justifiable. But he afterwards cites, apparently without disapproval, cases in which the Utopians inflicted it. See below, p. 230.

² Compare what Colet says, in his Letters to Radulphus, about Moses having adapted his language to 'the uncultivated nature of those poor people, but lately occupied among the bricks and clay.' His tone is yet more striking in the original Latin, where he says: 'Sed crassiter et pingue docenda fuit stulta illa et macra multitudo.' See the Letters on the Mosaic Account of the Creation, 1876, p. 12.

lawe of clemencie and mercie, vnder the whiche he ruleth vs with fatherlie gentlenessse, as his dere chylde, hath geuen vs greater scoupe and license to execute^a crueltie one vpon an other.

“Now ye haue hard the reasons, whereby I am perswaded that this punishment is vnlawful. Furthermore I thinke there is no body that knoweth not, how vnreasonable, yea how pernicious a thyng it is to the weale publike, that a thefe, and a homicide or morderer, shuld suffer equall and lyke punyshment. For the thefe, seing that man that is condempned for thefte in no lesse ieopardie, nor iudged to no lesse punishment, then hym that is conuict of manslaughter; through thys cogitacion onelye he is stronglye and forcybly prouoked, and in a maner constreyned, to kyl him, whom els he would haue but robbed. For, the murder ones^b done, he is in lesse care^c, and in more hope that the dede shall not be bewrayed or knowen, seyng the partye is now deade and rydde out of the waye, whyche onely myght haue vttered and disclosed it. But if he chaunce to be taken and discriued, yet he is in no more daunger and ieopardie then yf he had commytted but single felonye. Therefore whyles we goo about wyth suche crueltie to make theues aferd, we prouoke them to kyl good men.

^a to the execution of.

^b beyng ones.

^c feare.

mulctauit. Ne putemus deum in noua lege clementiae, qua pater imperat filiis, maiorem indulsisse nobis inuicem saeuendi licentiam.

Haec sunt cur non licere putem. Quam^a uero sit absurdum, atque etiam perniciosum reipublicae, furem atque homicidam ex aequo puniri, nemo est, opinor, qui nesciat. Nempe quum latro conspiciat non minus imminere discriminis duntaxat furti damnato, quam si praeterea conuincatur homicidii, hac una cogitatione impellitur in caedem eius, quem alioqui fuerat tantum spoliaturus; quippe praeterquam quod deprehensio nihil sit plus periculi, est etiam in caede securitas maior, et maior caelandi spes sublato facinoris indice. Itaque, dum fures nimis atrociter studemus perterrefacere, in bonorum incitamus perniciem.

^a quantum, A.

“ Now as touchyng this question, what punysshemente were more commodious and better ; that trulye in my iudgement is easier to be founde, than what punysshement were^a wurse. For whie should we dowt that to be a good and a profytable waye for the punysshemente of offendours, whyche we knowe dydde in tymes paste so longe please the Romaynes ; men in thadmynystratyon of a weale publyque moste experte, polytyque, and cunnyng? Such as amonge them weare conuycte of great and heynous trespaces, them they condempned into ston quarris, and in to myenes to dygge mettalle, there to be kepte in cheynes all the dayes of theyr lyfe¹.

“ But as concernyng this matter, I allow the ordenaunce of no nation so well as that^b I sawe (whyles I trauayled a brode aboutt the wordle) vsed in Persia, amonge the

^a might be.

^b that which.

Iam quod quaeri solet, quae punitio possit esse commodior ; hoc meo iudicio haud paulo facilius est repertu, quam quae possit esse deterior. Cur enim dubitemus eam uiam utilem esse castigandis sceleribus, quam scimus olim tam diu placuisse Romanis administrandae reipublicae peritissimis? Nempe hi magnorum facinorum conuictos in lapidicinas atque fodienda metalla damnabant, perpetuis adseruandos uinculis.

Quamquam ego quod ad hanc | rem attinet nullius institutum gentis 46
probo quam id quod interea dum peregrinabar in Perside obser-

¹ What the state of things was in these penal stone-quarries and mines, may be inferred from a passage of Plautus, where Tyndarus, a character who has gone through them, says that pandaemonium is nothing to them :—

‘ Vidi ego multa saepe picta, quae
Acherunti fierent Cruciaimenta ; verum enim vero nulla
adaeque est Acheruns, Atque ubi ego fui in lapidinis.’

Capt. v. 4.

For the subject of condemnation to the mines, which corresponded in some degree to our penal servitude, see the Digest, Lib. xlviiii, Tit. xix, §§ 4-6. Pole, in the Dialogue before quoted (p. 196) is of much the same opinion as Hythloday. In case of incorrigible wrongdoers, ‘ I wold thynke hyt gud,’ he says, ‘ that the felon schold be take and put in some commyn worke, as to labur in byldyng the wallys of cytes and townys, or els in some other magnyfycal work of the prynce of the reame.’

people that commenlye be called the polylerytes¹; whose lande is bothe large and ample, and also well and wyttelye gouerned; and the people in all conditions free and ruled by their owne lawes, sauing that they paye a yerely tribute to the great king of Persia. But bicause they be farre from the sea, compassed and closed in^a almoste rounde abowte wyth hygh mountaynes, and do content them selves wyth the frutes of theyr owne lande, whyche is of yt selfe verye fertyle and frutefull: for thys cause nother they goo to other cowntreys, nor other comme to them. And accordyng to the olde custome of the lande, they desyre not to enlarge the bowndes of theyr domynions; and those that they haue by reason of the hyghe hylles be easelye defended; and the trybute whyche they paye to the myghtye Kynge^b settethe them quyete and free from warfare. Thus theyre lyffe ys commodious rather then gallawnte, and maye better be callede happye or luckye, then notable or famous. For they be not knowne asmuche as by name, I suppose, sauynge onlye to theyr nexte neyghbours and borderours.

^a inclosed.

^b to their chiefe lord and kinge.

uatum apud uulgo dictos Polyleritas adnotauit; populum neque exiguum neque imprudenter institutum, et nisi quod tributum quotannis Persarum pendit regi, caetera liberum ac suis permissum legibus. Caeterum quoniam longe ab mari, montibus fere circumdati, et suae terrae nulla in re maligne^a contenti fructibus, neque adeunt alios saepe, neque adeuntur, tamen ex uetusto more gentis neque fines prorogare student, et quos habent ab omni facile iniuria et montes tuentur, et pensio quam rerum potenti persoluunt. immunes prorsus ab militia, haud perinde splendide atque commode, felicesque magis quam nobiles aut clari, degunt; quippe ne nomine quidem, opinor, praeter quam conterminis, admodum satis noti.

Respublica
Polyleritarum apud Persas.

^a i. q. malignae.

¹ Described as a sort of people of Laish. The name (πολὸς λῆρος, 'much nonsense') is not, however, meant to express their character, but to hint that the assumption of their existence was nonsense.

“ They that in thys lande be attayntede and conuycte of felonye, make restitutyon of that^a they stoole to the ryghte owner, and not (as they doo in other landes) to the Kyng; whome they thynke to haue no more ryghte to the thefe stolen thyng than the thieffe himselfe hath. But if the thyng be loste or made awaye, then the value of yt is paide of the goodes of such offendours, whyche elles remayneth all hole to their wyffes and chyldrene. And they them selves be condempned to be common laborers; and, onles the thefte be verye heynous, they be nother locked in pryson, nor fettered in gyues, but be vntyed and goo at large, laborynge in the common workes. They that refuse labour, or goo slowly and slacly to there woorke, be not only¹ tied in cheynes, but also pricked forward with stripes. They that be^b diligent about their woorke liue without checke or rebuke. Euery nyghte they be called in by name, and be locked in theyr chambers. Besyde their dayly labour, their lyffe is nothyng harde or incommodious. Their fare is indyfferent good, borne at the chardges of the weale publyque, bycause they be commen seruauntes to the commen wealth. But their

^a that which.

^b But being.

Ergo apud hos furti qui peraguntur, quod sustulere domino reddunt; non, quod alibi fieri solet, principi; utpote cui tantum iuris esse censent in rem furtiuam quantum ipsi furi. Sin res perierit, precio ex bonis furum confecto, ac persoluto tum reliquo uxoribus eorum atque liberis integro, ipsi damnantur in opera. ac nisi atrociter commissum furtum est, neque clauduntur ergastulo, neque gestant compedes, sed liberi ac soluti in publicis occupantur operibus. detrectantes ac languidius gerentes sese, non tam uinculis cohercent quam excitant uerberibus. strenuam nauantes operam, absunt a contumeliis, noctu tantum nominatim censiti cubiculis | includuntur. praeter assiduum 47 laborem nihil incommodi est in uita. Aluntur enim haud duriter, qui publicae rei seruiunt, e publico: alibi aliter. Siquidem alicubi quod prison as flog them’: that is, they prefer flogging to imprisonment.

¹ This is not the sense of the Latin, which is ‘they do not so much im-

charges in all places of the land is not borne a lyke. For in some partes that^a is bestowed vpon them is gathered of almes. And though that waye be vncerteyn, yet the people be so full of mercye and pytie, that none is fownde more profytable or plentyfull. In some places certeyn landis¹ be appoynted here vnto ; of the reuenewes wherof they be fownde^b. And in some places euery man geuyth a certeyne trybute for the same vse and purpose. Agayne in some partes of the lande thies seruyng men (for so be thies damned persons called²), do no common worke ; but, as euery priuate man nedeth laborours, so he cometh into the markette place³, and there hiereth some of them for meate and drynke, and a certeyne limityd wayges by the daye, sumwhat cheper then he shoulde hire a free man. It is also lawfull for them to chastyce the slowth of thies seruyng men wyth strypes.

“By thys meanes they neuer lacke woorke ; and besydes their meate and dryncke euery one of them bryngeth dayly sum thyng into the common treasury⁴. All and impeditur in eos ex eleemosyna colligitur : atque ea uia quanquam incerta, tamen ut est ille populus misericors, nulla reperitur uberior. alibi reditus quidam publici ad id destinantur. Est ubi certum in eos usus tributum uiritim conferunt. Quin aliquot in locis nullum publicum opus faciunt, sed ut priuatus quisque eget mercenariis, ita illorum cuiuspian in eum diem operam, stata mercede, conducit apud forum ; paulo minoris quam quanti liberam fuerat conducturus. prae-terea fas est seruilem ignauiam flagris corripere.

^a that which.

^b mainteined.

Sic fit uti nunquam opere careant ; et praeter uictum aliquod quoque

¹ Nothing is said about lands in the Latin. The English here is diffuse.

² For some reason Robynson has inserted here the explanation that in the Latin comes afterwards, p. 68.

³ This ancient custom may still be seen practised in some country towns. For the compulsory hiring prevalent in the Tudor times (as by Statute

5 Eliz. cap. 4) see Jacob's Law Dictionary, under the heading 'Servants.'

⁴ That is, in addition to the advantage gained to the state by these criminals being supported by private employers, the money they receive as wages is paid into the common fund. As is explained just after, the convicts themselves may not keep any.

euery one of them be apparrayled in one colour. Their heddys be not polled or shauen, but rownded a lytle aboute the eeres; and the tpype of the one eare is cut of. Euery one of them may take meat and drincke of their frindes, and also a cote of their owne collour; but to receyve monye is deathe, as well to the geuer as to the receyuour. And no lesse ieopardie it is for a free man to receyue moneye of a seruyng man, for any manner of cause; and lykewyse for seruyng men to touche weapons. The seruyng men of euery seuerall shyere be dystyncte and knowen from other by their seuerall and dystyncte badges; whyche to caste away is death: as it is also to be seene owte of the precyncte of their owne sheire, or to talke wyth a seruyng man of another shyere. And it is no lesse daunger to them for to intende to runne awaye, then to do yt in dede. Yea, and to concele suche an enterpryes in a seruyng man yt is deathe; in a free man seruytude. Of the contrarye parte, to hym that openeth and vttereth suche counselles be decreyde large giftes: to a free man a great somme of moneye; to a seruyng man freedome; and to them bothe forgeuynes and pardone of that they were of counsell in that pretence. So that¹ die ab singulis publico inferatur aerario. Vno quodam colore uestiuntur et omnes et soli, capillo non abraso, uerum paulo supra auriculas attonso, e quarum altera paululum praescinditur. Cibum cuique ab amicis dari potumque, ac sui coloris uestem, licet: pecuniam datam esse danti pariter atque accipienti capitale; neque minus periculum etiam homini libero quacunque de causa nummum a damnato recepisse, et seruos item (sic enim damnatos uocant²) arma contingerè. Suos quaeque regio propria distinguit nota, quam abiecissee capitale est, ut uel extra suos conspici fines, uel cum alterius regionis seruo quicquam esse collocutum. At neque tutior fugae meditatio quam ipsa est fuga. Quin conscium | talis fuisse consilii in seruo nex est; 48 in libero seruitus. Contra indici praemia decreta sunt; libero pecunia,

At idem hodie
famuli nobilium pulchrum sibi ducunt.

¹ Rather 'that it may never,' &c.; purpose, not consequence.

² See note above, p. 67.

yt can neuer be so good for them to goo forwarde in theyre euyll purpose, as by repentaunce to turne backe.

“Thys is the lawe and ordre in thys behalfe, as I haue shewed yow. Wherin what humanytye is vsede, howe farre yt is frome crueltye, and howe commodious yt is, yow doo playnlye perceue: for asmuche as the ende of their wrath and punysshement intendeth nothyng elles but the distructyon of vyces and sauynge of men; wyth so vsynge and orderynge them, that theye can not chuse but be good; and what harme so euer theye dyd before, in the resydewe of theyre lyffe to make amendys for the same.

“Moreouer yt is so lytle feared, that they shoulde torne agayne to theyre vycious condytyons, that wayefarynge men wyll for theyre sauegarde chuse them to theyre guydes before annye other, in euerye sheyre chaungynge and takynge newe. For yf they wolde commytte robberye, theye haue nothyng abowte them meate for that purpose. They maye towche no weapons: moneye fownde abowte them shoulde betraye the robberye. They shoulde be no soner taken wyth the maner, but furthwyth they shoulde be punysshed. Nother theye can haue annye hoope at all to skape awaye by flyenge. For howe shoulde a man, seruo libertas. utrique uero uenia atque impunitas conscientiae, ne quando persequi malum consilium quam poenitere sit tutius.

Huius rei haec lex atque hic ordo est, quem dixi. qui quantum habeat humanitatis et commodi, facile patet; quando sic irascitur ut uitia perimat, seruatis hominibus, atque ita tractatis ut bonos esse necesse sit, et quantum ante damni dederunt, tantum reliqua uita resartiant.

Porro ne ad pristinos relabantur mores, adeo nullus est metus, ut uiatores quoque, quibus iter aliquo institutum est, non aliis uix ducibus sese tutioreis arbitrentur, quam seruis illis, ad quamque regionem subinde commutatis. Nempe ad perpetrandum latrocinium nihil habent usquam non importunum: manus inermes; pecunia tantum sceleris index; deprehensio parata uindicta, neque spes ulla prorsus fugiendi quouam. Quo enim pacto falleret ac tegeter fugam, homo that in no parte of hys apparrell is lyke other men, flye preuelye and vnknowne, oneles he wolde runne awaye naked? Howe be yt, so also flyinge, he shoulde be dyscryued by hys rounding and his eare marke¹. But yt is a thyng to be dowted, that they will lay their heddes together, and conspire agaynst the weale publyque. No, no, I warraunte you. For the seruyng men of one shere alone could neuer hoope to bryng to passe suche an enterpryse, wythowte sollycetyng, entysyng, and allurynge the seruyng men of many other shyeres to take their partes. Whych thyng is to them so impossyble, that they may not asmuche as speake or talke together, or salute one an other. No, it is not to be thought that they wold make their owne countrey men and companyons of their counsell² in such a matter, whych they knowe well shoulde be ieopardye to the concelour therof, and greate commodytye and goodnes to the opener of^a the same: where as on the other parte, ther is none of them al hoopes or in dyspayre to recouer agayne hys^b freedom, by humble obedience, by pacyent suffryng, and by geanyng good tokens and lyklyhode of hymself, that he wyll euer after that liue lyke a trewe and an honeste

^a and detectour of.

^b hys former estate of.

nulla uestium parte populo similis, nisi abeat nudus? quin sic quoque fugientem proderet auricula. At ne inito saltem consilio coniurent in rempublicam, id demum scilicet periculum est. quasi in tantam uenire spem ulla possit uicinia, non tentatis ac sollicitatis ante multarum regionum seruitiis. quae tantum absunt a facultate conspirandi, ut ne conuenire quidem et colloqui aut salutare se mutuo liceat: ut credantur interim id consilium intrepide credituri suis, quod | reticentibus periculosum, prodentibus maximo esse bono sciant. Quum 49 contra nemo sit prorsus exspes, obediendo ac perferendo, bonamque de se prebendo spem emendatoris in posterum uitae, posse his modis man. For euery yeare dyuers be^a restoryd agayne to their freedome, throughe the commendatyon of their patience¹.”

¹ Burnet: 'their crop'd Ear.'

² 'Of their counsell,' that is, their confidants.

‘Whan I had thus spoken, saynge moreouer that I coulde see no cause whie this ordre might not be had in England, with much more proffyte then the Justyce which the lawier so highly praised: “Naye” (quod the lawier), “this could neuer be so stablished in England, but that it must neades bringe the weale publique into great ieopardie and hasarde.” And as he was thus saying, he shaked his heade, and made a wrie mouth, and so^b held his peace. And all that were ther present, with one assent agreid to his saying.

“Well” (quod the Cardinall), “yet it were hard to iudge withowte a proffe whether this order wold doo well here or no. But when the sentence of deathe is geuen, if than the king should commaunde execution to be differryd and fieri ut libertatem aliquando recuperet, quippe nullo non anno restitutis aliquot commendatione patientiae.

^a of them be.

^b so he.

Haec quum dixissem, atque adiecissem nihil mihi uideri causae, quare non hic modus haberi uel in Anglia possit², multo maiore cum fructu quam illa iusticia, quam iuris ille peritus tantopere laudauerat: sub haec ille, nempe iuris consultus: Nunquam, inquit, istud sic stabiliri queat in Anglia, ut non in summum discrimen adducat rempublicam. et simul haec dicens commouit caput, ac distorsit labrum, atque ita conticuit. Et omnes qui aderant pedibus in eius ibant sententiam.

Tum Cardinalis, non est, inquit, procliue diuinare, commode ne an secus res cessura sit, nullo prorsus facto periculo. Verum si, pronuntiata mortis sententia, differri executionem³ iubeat princeps, atque

¹ This is an anticipation of our ‘ticket of leave’ system. By the Penal Servitude Act of 1853, power was given ‘to release convicts in the United Kingdom conditionally on ticket of leave,’ instead of releasing them, as formerly, on ‘free pardon.’

See Sir F. du Cane’s article on Prisons in Chambers’s Encyclopaedia. The principle, as we here see, had been enunciated long before in the Utopia.

² This should in strict syntax be posset.

³ This is a late Latin use of the word.

spared, and wold proue this order and fassion; taking away the priuileges of all saintuaries; if then the proffe wold^a declare the thing to be good and profitable, than it were well done that it were stablissed. Els the condempned and reprimed parsons may aswell and as iustly be put to death after this proffe, as when they were first cast. Nother any ioperdye can in the meane space growe here of. Yea, and me thinketh that thies vagaboundes may very well be ordered after the same fassion, against whome we haue hitherto made so many lawes, and so litle preuailed."

'When the Cardinal had thus said, than euery man gaue greate praise to my sayinges, which a litle before they had disallowed. But most of all was esteemed that which was spoken of vagaboundes, bicause it was the cardinalles owne addition.

'I can not tell whether it were best to reherse the communication that followed, for it was not very sad¹. But ^a shoulde.

hunc experiatur morem, cohibitis asylorum priuilegiis, tum uero si res comprobetur euentu esse utilis, rectum fuerit eam stabiliri. alioqui tunc quoque afficere supplicio eos qui sunt ante damnati, neque minus e republica fuerit, neque magis iniustum, quam si nunc idem fieret; nec ullum interea nasci ex ea re potest periculum. Quin mihi certe uidentur erronee quoque ad eundem posse modum non pessime tractari, in quos hactenus tam multis aeditis legibus, nihil | promouimus 50 tamen.

Haec ubi dixit Cardinalis, quae me narrante contempserant omnes, eadem nemo non certatim laudibus est prosequutus; maxime tamen illud de erroneis, quoniam hoc ab ipso adiectum est.

Nescio an quae sunt secuta silere prestiterit; erant enim ridicula :

¹ More seems to have had some little misgiving about introducing the story that follows. If so, his discernment has been justified by the result. In one edition of the Utopia, printed at Cologne, 1629, in 24°, and described on the title-page as 'juxta Indicem librorum expurgatorum Cardinalis et Archiepiscopi Toletani correcta,' a great part of the anecdote is omitted. From 'Subrisit Cardinalis, et approbat ioco, caeteri etiam serio,' the text

yet you shal here it: for ther was no euell in it; and partly it partained to the matter before said.

'Ther chaused to stond by a certein iesting parasite, or scoffer, which wold seme to resemble and cownterfeit the foole. But he did in such wise counterfeyt, that he was almost the very same in dead that he labored to represent. He so studied with wordes and saynges, brought furth so out of time and place, to make sporte and moue laughter, that he himself was oftener laughed at then his iestes were. Yet the foolish fellow brought out now and then such indifferent and reasonable stuffe, that he made the prouerbe trew, which sayeth: he that shoteth oft, at the last shal hit the marke¹. So that when one of the company said that thorough my communication a good ordre was found for theues, and that the Cardinall also had wel prouided for vagaboundes; so that only remained some good prouision to be made for them that through siknes and age were fallen into pouerty, and were become so impotente and vnweldye, that they were not sed narrabo tamen: nam non erant mala, et aliquid ad hanc rem pertinabant.

Adstabat forte parasitus quidam, qui uideri uolebat imitari morionem, sed ita simulabat, ut propior uero esset, tam frigidis dictis captans risum, ut ipse saepius quam dicta sua riderentur. Excidebant homini tamen interdum quaedam, adeo non absurda, ut fidem adagio facerent, crebro iactu iaci aliquando Venerem. Is ergo, dicente quodam e conuiuis: Iam meo sermone bene prouisum esse furibus, atque a Cardinale etiam cautum de erroneis, restare nunc uti his praeterea consuleretur publicitus, quos ad egestatem morbus aut senectus im-Festius dialogus fratris et morionis.

passes on to 'En, mi More, quam longo,' &c., leaving out all the section beginning 'Caeterum theologus quidam.' That, in the judgment of some ecclesiastical censors, the Utopia should have been declared to need expurgation, is a noticeable fact.

¹ The Latin proverb, taken from the throw of dice, is given by Erasmus in his Adagia (1629), p. 99 b, in the form 'Si saepe iacies, aliquando Venerem iacies'; Robynson alters the comparison. Burnet, more correctly: 'He who throws the Dice often, will sometimes have a lucky Hit.'

able to woorke for their living: "Tush" (quod he) "let me alon with them; you shall see me do well ynough with them. For I had rather then anye good that this kind of people were dreuen sumwhether out of my sighte: they haue so sore troubled me many times and oft, when they haue with their lamentable teares¹ begged money of me; and yet thei could neuer to mi mind so tune their song, that therby they euer got of me one farthyng. For euer more the one of thies two chaunced: eyther that I wolde not, or elles that I could not, bicause I had it not. Therefore nowe they be waxed wyse. When^a they see me goo bye, bycause they wyll not leese theyr laboure, they lette me go^b, and saye not one worde to me. So they looke for nothing of me; no, in good sothe, no more then if I were a priest^c. But I will make a law, that all thies beggers shalbe distribute and bestowed into houses of religion. The men shalbe made laye bretherne, as they call them, and the women nunnes." Here at the Cardenall smiled, and allowed it in iest; yea, and all the residue in good earnest.

^a for when.

^b passe.

^c priest or a monke.

pulisset, atque ad labores unde uiui possit reddidisset impotes: Sine, inquit, me: nam ego et hoc recte ut fiat uidero. Etenim hoc genus hominum misere cupio aliquo e conspectu amoliri meo; ita me male uexarunt saepe, cum querulis illis opplorationibus flagitarent pecuniam, quas nunquam tamen tam commode potuerunt occinere, ut nummum a me extorquerent. Quippe semper alterum euenit, ut aut non libeat dare, aut ne liceat quidem, quando nihil est quod detur. Itaque nunc coeperunt sapere. nam ne perdant operam, ubi me praeterire uident, 51 praetermittunt taciti: ita nihil a me sperant amplius, non hercle magis quam si essem sacerdos. Sed illos ego mendicos omnes lata lege distribui ac dispartiri iubeo in Benedictinorum caenobia, et fieri laicos ut uocant monachos: mulieres moniales esse impero. Subrisit Cardinalis et approbat ioco, caeteri etiam serio.

Prouerbum
uulgo iactatum apud mendicos.

¹ The Latin is more expressive 'those doleful applications they beset than this. 'Their pitiful importunities' would come a little nearer, or you with.'

'But a certeyne freare, graduate in diuinitie, toke such pleasur and delite in this ieste of priestes and monkes, that he also, beinge elles a man of grislye and sterne grauitye, beganne merilye and wantonlye to ieste and taunt. "Nay" (quod he), "you shal not so be ridde and dispatched of beggers, oneles you make some prouision also for us frears." "Whie" (quod the iester) "that is doon all redy. For mi lord him selfe set a very good ordre for yow, when he decreed that vagaboundes should be kept strayt, and set to worke; for yow be the greatest and veriest vagaboundes that be."

'This iest also, when they saw the Cardinal not disproue it, euery man tooke it gladly, sauing only the Frear. For he (and that no marueil) when he was thus^a towchyd one the quicke, and hit on the gawl, so fret, so fumed and chafid at it, and was in such a rage, that he could not refrayn himselfe from chiding, skolding, railing, and reuiling¹. He called the fellow ribbald, villayn, iauell, back-

^a beynge thus.

Caeterum Theologus quidam frater hoc dicto in sacerdotes ac monachos adeo est exhilaratus, ut iam ipse quoque coeperit ludere, homo alioqui prope ad toruitatem grauis. At ne sic quidem, inquit, extricaberis a mendicis, nisi nobis quoque prospexeris fratribus. Atqui, inquit Parasitus, hoc iam curatum est. Nam Cardinalis egregie prospexit uobis, quum statueret de coercentis atque opere exercendis erronibus; nam uos estis erronei maximi.

Hoc quoque dictum, quum coniectis in Cardinalem oculis eum uiderent non abnuere, coeperunt omnes non illibenter arripere, excepto fratre. Nam is (neque equidem miror) tali perfusus aceto², sic indignatus est atque incanduit, ut nec a conuiciis quidem potuerit temperare: hominem uocauit nebulonem, detractorem, susurronem,

Allusit ad illud Horatianum, italo perfusus
aceto.

¹ A long rendering of conuiciis. Burnet: 'he could not forbear railing at the Fool.'

² The reference is indicated in the marginal note: Hor. Sat. i. vii. 32, 'At Graecus, postquam est Italo per-fusus aceto,' &c. Pace in his De Fructu, which appeared the year after the first edition of the Utopia, speaking of More, says that he too, when occasion demands, imitates good cooks, and 'omnia acri perfundit aceto' (p. 82).

biter, sclaunderer, and the sonne^a of perdition; citing therwith terrible threatening out of holy scriptur. Then the iesting skoffer began to play the scoffer indede, and verily he was good at yt, for he could play a part in that play, no man better¹. "Patient iourself, good maister Freare" (quod he), "and be not angry; for scriptur saith: *in your patience you shal saue your sowles*²." Then the Freare (for I wil rehearse his oune very woordes): "No, gallous wretche, I am not angry" (quod he); "or at the leaste wise I do not synne: for the psalmiste saith, *be you angry and sinne not*³."

'Then the Cardinal spake gently to the Freare, and desiered him to quyete hymself. "No, my lord" (quod he), "I speake not but of a good zeal as I ought; for holly men had a good zeale. Wherfor it is said; *the zeale of thy house hath eaten me*⁴. And it is song in the church: The skorners of Helizeus, whiles he went vp into the house of god,

^a childe.

et filium perditionis; minas interim terribiles citans e scriptura sacra. Iam scurra serio scurrari coepit, et erat plane in sua palaestra. Noli, inquit, irasci, bone frater: scriptum est, in patientia uestra possidebitis animas uestras. Rursum frater (referam enim ipsius uerba) non irascor, | inquit, furcifer, uel 52
saltem non pecco. Nam Psalmista dicit, Irascimini et nolite peccare.

Admonitus deinde frater a Cardinale suauiter, ut suos affectus compesceret, Non, domine, inquit, ego loquor nisi ex bono zelo, sicut debeo. Nam uiri sancti habuerunt bonum zelum, unde dicitur, Zelus domus tuae comedit me, et canitur in ecclesiis: Irrisores Helizei, dum

¹ The spirit of the idiomatic English here rivals that of the original.

² St. Luke xxi. 19. The Revised Version agrees with the Vulgate in using the future tense here: 'ye shall win.'

³ Ps. iv. 4. The R. V. gives 'be ye angry' as a marginal reading, in place of 'stand in awe.' The former has the support of the LXX and Vulgate, which here agree, and also of St. Paul's citation in Eph. iv. 26.

⁴ Ps. lxix. 9 (Vulg. lxxviii. 10).

felt the zeale of the bald¹; as peraduentur this skorning villain ribauld shal feel." "You do it" (quod the cardinal) "perchance of a good mind and affection. But me thinketh you should do, I can not tel whether more holily, certes more wisely, if you wold not set, your wit to a fooles witte, and with a foole take in hand a foolish contention." "No, forsoeth, my lorde" (quod he), "I should not doo more wiselye. For Salomon the wise sayeth²: Answer a foole according to his folishnes^a; like as I do now, and do shew him the pit that he shall fall into, if he take not hede. For if many skorners of Helizeus, which was but one bald man, felt the zeal of the balde, howe much more shall one skorner of many frears feele, amonge whom be many bald men? And we haue also the popes bulles, wherby all that mock and skorne us be excommunicate, suspended, and acursed³." The cardinal seing that none end wold be made, sent away the iester by a preuy

^a folye.

*conscendit domum dei, zelus calui sentiunt*⁴; sicut fortasse sentiet iste derisor, scurra, ribaldus. Facis, inquit Cardinalis, bono fortassis affectu, sed mihi uideris facturus, nescio an sanctius, certe sapientius, si te ita compares, ne cum homine stulto et ridiculo ridiculum tibi certamen instituas. Non, domine, inquit, non facerem sapientius. Nam Solomon ipse sapientissimus dicit: Responde stulto secundum stultitiam eius, sicut ego nunc facio, et demonstro ei foueam in quam cadet, nisi bene praecaueat. Nam si multi irrisores Helizei, qui erat tantum unus caluus, senserunt zelus calui, quanto magis sentiet unus derisor multorum fratrum, in quibus sunt multi calui? et etiam habemus bullam Papalem, per quam omnes qui derident nos sunt excommunicati. Cardinalis, ubi uidit nullum fieri

Apparet fratrem
ob imperitiam zelus abusum neutro genere,
sicut hoc scelus.

¹ 2 Kings ii. 24. See note 4 below.

² Proverbs xxvi. 4.

³ This addition to 'excommunicate' is the translator's own.

⁴ The lines are from the Hymn of Adam of St. Victor, De Resurrectione Domini:—

Irriores Helisaei, Dum conscendit domum Dei,
Zelus calui sentiunt.

The marginal note points out the skit in making the friar use zelus, as if it were a neuter noun declined like scelus.

beck, and turned the communication to an other matter. Shortly after, when he was risen from the table, he went to heare his sueters, and so dismissed vs.

‘Loke, mayster More with how long and tedious a tale I haue kept you, which suerly I wolde haue bene ashamed to haue done, but that you so earnestly desiered me, and did after suche a sort geue eare vnto hit, as though you wolde not that any parcell of that communication should be left out; which though I haue doone sumwhat briefly, yet coulde I not chuse but rehearse it, for the iudgement of them¹, which, when they had improued and disallowed my sayinges, yet incontinent hearinge the Cardinall allowe them, dyd themselves also approue the same; so impudently flattering him, that they were nothingse ashamed to admit, yea, almost in good earnest, his iesters folish inuentions; bicause that he him selfe, by smylng at them, did seme not to disproue them. So that hereby you may right well perceauē, how litle the courtiers wold regard and esteme me and my sayinges.’

finem, nutu ablegato parasito, ac aliam in rem commodum² uerso sermone, paulo post surgit e mensa, atque audiendis clientum negotiis dedit se, nosque dimisit.

En, mi More, quam longo te sermone oneraui; quod tam diu facere plane puidisset me, nisi tu et | cupide flagitasses, et sic uidereris 53 audire, tanquam nolles quicquam eius confabulationis omitti; quae, quanquam aliquanto perstrictius, narranda tamen mihi fuit omnino propter eorum iudicium, qui quae me dicente spreuerant, eadem rursus euestigio non improbante Cardinale, etiam ipsi comprobauerunt; usque adeo assentantes ei, ut parasiti quoque eius inuentis, quae dominus per iocum non aspernabatur, adblandirentur³, et serio prope modum admitterent: ut hinc possis aestimare quanti me ac mea consilia aulici forent aestimaturi.

¹ That is ‘for the sake of showing what the judgment of those persons was worth, who,’ &c. Burnet takes it to imply the enabling a hearer to form his judgment of them.

² Both Robynson and Burnet ignore this word in their translations. It is common in the sense of ‘opportunely,’ ‘seasonably.’

³ For this compound there is, I think, no authority.

'I ensure you, maister Raphael' (quod I), 'I toke great delectation in hearing you: all thinges that yow sayde were spoken so wittily and so pleasauntly. And me thought my self to be in the meane time not only at home in my countrey, but also, throughe the pleasaunt remembrance of the Cardinall, in whose housse I was brought vp of a child¹, to waxe a childe agayne. And, frend Raphaell, though I did beare verye greate loue towardes you before, yet seyng yow do so earnestly fauour thys man, yow wyll not beleue howe muche my loue towardes yow is nowe increased. But yet, all this notwithstanding, I can by no meanes change my mind, but that I must needys beleue that you, if you be disposed, and can find in youre harte to followe some prynces courte, shall with your good counselles greatly healpe and further the comen wealthe. Wherefore there is nothyng more apperteynyng to your dewty; that is to say, to the dewty of a good man. For where as youre Plato² Judgethe that

Profecto, mi Raphael, inquàm, magna me affecisti uoluptate, ita sunt abs te dicta prudenter simul et lepide omnia. praeterea uisus mihi interim sum, non solum in patria uersari, uerum etiam reuerascere quodammodo iucunda recordatione Cardinalis illius, in cuius aula puer sum educatus. cuius uiri memoriae quod tu tam impense faues, non credas, mi Raphael, quanto mihi sis effectus hoc nomine charior, cum esses alioqui charissimus. Caeterum non possum adhuc ullo pacto meam demutare sententiam, quin te plane putem, si animum inducas tuum, uti ne ab aulis principum abhorreas, in publicum posse te tuis consiliis plurimum boni conferre. quare nihil magis incumbit tuo, hoc est boni uiri, officio. Si quidem cum tuus censeat Plato, respublicas ita demum futuras esse felices, si aut

¹ See the Introduction, § 1.

² Here, as below, p. 104, More gives the sense, not the exact words of Plato, as would be only natural, when the quotation is supposed to be made from memory. The passage is in the Republic, Book v. § 473. In Ficino's

Latin version it runs:—'Si non, inquam ego, aut philosophi regnabunt in ciuitatibus, aut reges qui nunc dicuntur et potentes legitime et iuste philosophabuntur . . . non est malorum requies, chare Glauco, ciuitatibus.'

weale publyques shall by this meanes attayne perfecte felicitie, other if phylosophers be kynges, or els if kynges giue them selves to the study of Philosophie; how farre, I praye yowe, shall commen wealthes then be from thys felicitie, if phylosophers wyll vouchesaufe to instructe kynges with their good counsell¹? 'They be not so vnkind' (quod he), 'but they would gladlye do it; yea, manye haue done it all readie in bookes that they haue put furth, if kynges and princes would be wylling and readie to folowe good counsell. But Plato doubteles dyd well forsee, oneles kynges themselves would applye their myndes to the studye of philosophie, that elles they would neuer thoroughlye allowe the counsell of philosophers; beyng themselves before euen from their tender age infectyd and corrupt with peruerse and euyll opinions. Whiche thyng Plato hymselfe prouyd trewe in kyng Dionise². If I should propose to any kynge holsome decrees, doinge my endeuour to pluck out of hys mynde

regent philosophi, aut reges philosophentur; quam procul aberit felicitas, si philosophi regibus nec dignentur saltem suam im|partiri 54 consilium? Non sunt, inquit ille, tam ingrati, quin id libenter facerent; imo multi libris aeditis iam fecerunt; si hii qui rerum patiuntur essent parati bene consultis parere. Sed bene haud dubie praeuidit Plato, nisi reges philosophentur ipsi, nunquam futurum ut peruersis opinionibus a pueris imbuti atque infecti penitus philosophantium comprobent consilia: quod ipse quoque experiebatur apud Dionysium. An non me putas, si apud aliquem regem decreta sana proponerem,

¹ The answer to the question thus put, would be 'Not far'; and this may have been what the translator meant. But the form of the sentence which follows makes it more likely that he wrote 'wyll not vouchesaufe,' corresponding to the nec dignentur of the Latin.

² Plutarch, in his Life of Numa quotes the saying of Plato (Rep. v. 473) to the effect that 'the only sure prospect of deliverance from the evils of life will be, when the divine Providence shall so order it, that the regal power, invested in a prince who has the sentiments of a philosopher, shall render virtue triumphant over vice.' Langhorne's transl., 1805, i. p. 191. For the change in the demeanour of Dionysius the younger, tyrant of Syracuse, towards Plato, see Plutarch's Dion., v. p. 243.

the pernicious originall causes of vice and noughtenes, thynke you not that I shoulde furthe with other be dryuen away, or elles made a laughynge stocke ?

'Goo to, suppose that I were^a with the Frenche kynge, and there syttyng in hys counsell, whyles that in^b that moste secrete consultation, the kyng hym self there beyng present in hys owne persone, they beat their braynes, and serche the verye bottomes of theyr wittes to discusse by what crafte and meanes the kyng maye styll kepe Myllayne and drawe to hym agayne fugatyue Naples¹; and then howe to conquere the Venetians², and howe to bryng vnder his Iurisdiction all Italye³; then et pernicioſa malorum ſemina conārer illi euellere, protinus aut eiciendum aut habendum ludibrio?

^a Well, suppose I were.

^b whyles in.

Age, ſinge me apud regem eſſe Gallorum, atque in eius conſidere conſilio, dum in ſecretiſſimo ſeſſu, præſidente rege ipſo in corona prudentiſſimorum hominum, magnis agituri ſtudiis, quibus artibus ac machinamentiſ Mediolanum retineat, ac fugitiuam illam Neapolim ad ſe retrahat: poſtea uero euertat Venetos, ac totam Italiam ſubiiciat

dehortatur ab
Italia paranda.

¹ 'Louis the Twelfth, on ascending the throne (1498), assumed the titles of Duke of Milan and King of Naples, thus unequivocally announcing his intention of asserting his claims, derived through the Visconti family, to the former, and, through the Angevin dynasty, to the latter state.'—Prescott: Ferdinand and Isabella, ch. x. Prescott then relates how, after securing the neutrality of Spain by the treaty of Marcoussis, Aug. 5, 1498, Louis 'effected the conquest of the entire duchy in little more than a fortnight.' Its duke, Lodovico Sforza, was sent captive into France, and the French king then turned his arms against Frederick, king of Naples, whose dominions he soon afterwards shared between himself and Ferdinand of Spain.

Naples is called by More fugitiva, 'that has so oft slip'd out of their Hands' (Burnet), to imply that the French kings had laid claim to it before. For the attempts upon it of Charles VIII, see Prescott, as above, p. 380.

² The partition of Venice between Louis XII, Ferdinand of Spain, the emperor Maximilian, and the Pope, was settled by the treaty of Cambray, in December, 1508. Louis had planned this six years before.

³ 'If the French get possession of Rome, the liberties of all Italy, and of every state in Europe, are in peril.'—Letter of Peter Martyr, Epist. 465, quoted by Prescott.

howe to wynde the dominion of Flaunders, Brabant, and of all Burgundie, with dyuers other landes, whose kyngdomes he hath longe a goo in mynde and purpose inuaded. Here¹, whyles one counselleth to conlude a leage of peace with the Venetians, whiche shal so longe endure^a, as shalbe thought mete and expedient for their purpose, and to make them also of their counsell, yea, and besydes that to gyue them parte of the praye, whyche afterwarde, when they haue brought theyr purpose abowte after their owne myndes they maye requyre and claym agayne. An other thynketh beste to hyere the Germaneynes². An other would haue the faouore of the Swychers³ wonne with money. An others aduyse is to appease the puyssaunte powre of the emperours maiestie with golde, as with a moste pleasaunt and acceptable sacrifice⁴. Whyles an other gyueth counsell to make peace wyth the kyng

^a so longe to endure.

sibi; deinde Flandros, Brabantos, totam postremo Burgundiam suae faciat ditionis, atque alias praeterea gentes, quarum regnum iam olim animo inuasit. Hic dum alius suadet feriendum cum Venetis foedus, tantisper duraturum, dum ipsius fuerit commodum; cum illis communicandum consilium; quin deponendam quoque apud eosdem aliquam praedae partem, quam rebus ex sententia peractis repetat; dum alius consulit conducendos Germanos, alius pecunia demulcendos Eluetios; alius aduersus numen imperatoriae maiestatis auro uelut Eluetii conducticii.

¹ At this point begins an almost interminable sentence in the Latin, of which the conditional member comes at p. 84, si ego homuncio, and the conclusion not till p. 87; the episode of the Achorians being worked into it.

² The allusion is, as the marginal note in later editions has it, to the 'Lance-knights,' the German Lanzknechte, who served as mercenaries in the French army on some occasions. In the great battle fought under the walls of Ravenna, April 11, 1512, Count Pedro Navarro led the Spanish Infantry against a formidable body of these, who were fighting on the side of the French under Gaston de Foix.

³ On the Swiss as mercenaries, see note below, p. 252.

⁴ A hit at the cupidity of the 'penniless and shifty' Maximilian, who actually took pay and served in the English camp at Tournay.—See Brewer: Reign of Henry VIII, i. p. 11.

of Arragone¹, and to restore vnto hym hys owne kyngdome of Nauarra², as a full assurance of peace. An other cummeth in wyth his .v. egges³, and aduyseth to howke in the kyng of Castell⁴ with somme hope of affynytie or allyaunce, and to brynge to theyr parte certeyne peers of hys courte for greate pensions: whyles they all staye at the chyfeste dowte of all, what to doo in the meane tyme with England, and yet agree al in this to make peace with the englishmen, and with moste suere and strong bondes to bīnd that weake and feable frendshyppe, so that they must be called frendes, and hadde in suspicion as enemies; and that therfore the skottes must be hadde in a reddines,

55 anathemate | propitiandum; dum alii uidetur cum Arragonum rege componendas esse res, et alieno Nauariae regno, uelut pacis authoramento, cedendum; alius interim censet Castelliae principem aliqua spe affinitatis irretiendum, atque aulicos nobiles aliquot in suam factionem certa pensione esse pertrahendos; dum maximus omnium nodus occurrit, quid statuendum interim de Anglia sit; caeterum de pace tractandum tamen, et constringenda firmissimis uinculis semper infirma societas, amici uocentur, suspiciantur ut inimici; habendos igitur paratos uelut in statione Scotos, ad omnem intentos occasionem,

¹ Ferdinand, the husband of Isabella of Castile.

² When the petty states previously in dispute between France and Spain had been absorbed by one or the other, it became evident that the little kingdom of Navarre, on the border of the two countries, must share the same fate. The proceedings connected with it are related in Prescott, ch. xxiii. They ended by the estates of Navarre taking an oath of allegiance to Ferdinand, March 23, 1513; and 'on the 15th of June, 1515, the Catholic monarch, by a solemn act in Cortes, held at Burgos, incorporated his new conquests into the kingdom of Castile.'—Prescott, as before, p. 680.

³ Mr. C. E. Doble points out to me that this proverb for officious intrusion often occurs in Swift's Journal to Stella but in the form 'comes in with his two eggs a penny' (Works, 1824, II. pp. 392, 412, 468). Ray, English Proverbs, 1737, p. 187, gives it in full: 'You come in with your five eggs a penny, and four of them be rotten.' See also the New English Dict. under 'egg.' When it was a complaint that eggs were but 'fower a penny,' (Decay of England, p. 98), one who 'came in with his five' might stand for a pushing dealer.

⁴ This may refer to some fresh negotiation for a marriage between the Princess Claude and Charles, who, just about the time when More was writing, after the death of his grandfather Ferdinand (Jan. 23, 1516), had caused himself to be proclaimed afresh King of Castile. See above, p. xxxii, n.

as it were in a standing reddie at all occasions, in aunter's¹ the Englyshe men should sturre neuer so litle, incontinent to set vpon them; and moreouer preuile and secretly, for openly it maye not be doone by the truce that is taken; pryuelye therfore, I saye, to make muche of some peere of Englande, that is bannysched his countrey, whiche must cleyme title to the crown of the realme, and affirme hym selfe iuste inheriture therof²; that by thys subtyll meanes they maye holde to them the kynge, in whom elles they haue but small truste and affiaunce.

'Here, I saye, where so greate and high matters be in consultation, where so manye noble and wyse men counsell their kyng only to warre; here, if I³, sely man, should ryse vp and wylle them to turne ouer the leafe⁴, and learne a newe lesson; sayng that my counsell is not to medle with Italy, but to tarrye styll at home, and that the kyngdome of fraunce alone is all moste greater, then that it maye well be gouerned of one man; so that the kyng si quid se commoueat Angli protinus immittendos; ad haec fouendum exulem nobilem aliquem occulte (namque id aperte ne fiat prohibent foedera) qui id regnum sibi deberi contendat, ut ea uelut ansa contineat suspectum sibi principem:—hic, inquam, in tanto rerum molimine, tot egregiis uiris ad bellum sua certatim consilia conferentibus, si ego homuncio surgam, ac uerti iubeam uela, omittendam Italiam censeam, et domi dicam esse manendum, unum Galliae regnum fere maius esse quam ut commode possit ab uno administrari, ¹ That is, in case that. See the Glossary.

² The reference is probably to Perkin Warbeck, who, in his assumption of the title of Duke of York, might be regarded, from the point of view taken in the text, as a 'peere of Englande, that is bannysched his countrey.' 'It is well known,' says Tytler, 'that the conspiracy was encouraged by Charles VIII of France, who invited Perkin into his kingdom, and received him with high distinction.' It was part of the plan for the rising in Warbeck's favour, that 'the Scottish monarch was to break at the head of his army across the Borders, and compel Henry to divide his forces.'—Hist. of Scotland, 1864, ii. pp. 259, 260.

³ See below, p. 87, n. 2.

⁴ This does not rightly convey the metaphor in verti uela, 'that there should be a shifting of sail,' 'that they should go on another tack.'

shoulde not nede to studye howe to gett more: and then shoulde propose vnto them the decrees of the people that be called the Achoriens¹, whiche be situate ouer agaynst the Ilande of Vtopia on the sowtheaste syde. Thies Achoriens ones made warre in their kinges quarrel, for to gette him an other kyngdom, whiche he layde clayme vnto, and auauanced hymself righte inheritoure to the crowne therof, by the title of an olde aliaunce². At the last, when they had gotten it, an sawe that they hadde euen as muche vexation and trouble in keping it, as they had in gettingyng it; and that³ other there newe conquered subiectes by sondrye occasions were makynge dayly insurrections to rebell agaynste them, or els that other countreys were contynually with diuers inrodes and forraginges inuadinge them; so that they were euer fyghtinge other for them, or agaynste them, and neuer coulde breke vp their campos: seyng them selves in the meane season pyllid ne sibi putet rex de aliis adiciendis esse cogitandum: tum si illis proponerem decreta Achiorum populi, Vtopiensium insulae ad Euronoton⁴ oppositi; qui quum olim bellum

Exemplum
annotandum.

56 gessissent, ut regi suo aliud obtinerent regnum, quod affinitatis antiquae causa sibi contendebat haereditate | ~~deberi~~, consequuti tandem id, ubi uiderunt nihilo sibi minus esse molestiae in retinendo, quam in quaerendo pertulerunt, uerum assidua pullulare semina uel internae rebellionis uel externae incursionis; in deditis ita semper aut pro illis aut contra pugnandum; nunquam dari facultatem dimittendi exercitus; compilari interim se; ~~efferi~~ foras pecu-

¹ The name is formed like that of the Utopians, from a and χώρα, 'those who have no room, or place' on the earth. ἄχωρος is found in Aelian in the sense of 'homeless,' 'with no resting-place.'

² That is, marriage alliance, affinitas. More may perhaps have been thinking of the ancient claim of England to the throne of France, as Shakspeare states it in the beginning of Henry V.

³ The translation is here rather lax. More literally it is: 'but that the seed-plots were ever ripening of insurrection from within or invasion from without; and that they must be so incessantly at war, either for or against their new subjects, that,' &c.

⁴ Euronotus, Ἐυρόνοτος, a word found in Pliny and Columella for the South-east wind.

and impoueryshed ; their money carryed owt of the Realme ; theyr owne men kyllled to mayntayne the glory of an other nation ; when they had no warre, peace nothyng better then warre¹, by reason that their people in warre had inured themselves to corrupte and wycked maners ; that they hadde taken a delycte and pleasure in robbyng and stealyng ; that through manslaughter they had gathered boldenes to mischiefe ; that their lawes were hadde in contempe, and nothyng set by or regarded ; that their kynge, beyng troubled with the chardge and gouernaunce of two kingdomes, coulde not nor was not able perfectly to discharge his office towards them bothe ; seyng agayne that all thies euellles and troubles were endeles : at the last laid there heades together ; and, lyke faithful and louinge subiectes, gaue to their kynge free choyse and libertie to kepe still the one of this .ii. kingdomes, whether he would ; allegyng that he was not able to kepe both, and that they were mo then might wel be gouerned of half a king ; for asmuche as no man would be content to take hym for his mulettour² that kepeth an other mans

niam ; alienae gloriolae suum impendi sanguinem ; pacem nihilo tutiorem ; domi corruptos bello mores ; imbibitam latrocinandi libidinem ; confirmatam caedibus audaciam ; leges esse contemptui ; quod rex in duorum curam regnorum distractus minus in utrumuis animus posset intendere : cum uiderent alioqui tantis malis nullum finem fore, into tandem consilio, regi suo humanissime fecerunt optionem retinendi utrius³ regni uellet, nam utriusque non fore potestatem, se plures esse quam qui a dimidiato possint rege gubernari, quum nemo sit libenter admissurus mulionem sibi cum alio

¹ That is, the state of things in time of peace being no better (lit. safer) than in time of war. The clause which follows, 'by reason that,' &c., is diffuse.

² I have not met with any proverb in this exact form. Equivalent ones will be found at p. 292 a of Erasmus's Adagia, ed. 1629, under the general heading of 'Impossibilia.'

'Moyle,' for mule, is found in a proclamation of the Lord Mayor of London, Aug. 5, 1554, quoted in Dr. W. Sparrow Simpson's S. Paul's Cathedral and old City Life, 1894, p. 85.

³ The construction is by 'attraction.'

moyles besides his. So this good prince was constreyned to be content with his olde kyngdome, and to gyue ouer the newe to one of his frendes; whiche shortelie after was violentlie dreuen out. Furthermore if I should declare vnto them, that all this busy preparaunce to warre, wherby so many nations for hys¹ sake shuld be brought into a troublesom hurley-burley, when all hys coffers were emptied, his treasures wasted and his people destroyed, should at the length through som mischaunce be in vaine and to none effect; and that therfore it were best for him to content him selfe with his owne kingdome of fraunce, as his forfathers and predecessours did before him; to make much of it, to enriche it, and to make it as flourisshing as he could; to endeaouere himself to loue his subjects, and again to be beloued of them; willingly to liue with them, peaceably to gouerne them; and with other kyngdomes not to medle, seinge that whiche he hath all redde is euen ynough for hym, yea, and more then he can well turne hym to; thys myne aduyse, maister More, how thynke you it would be harde and taken? 'So God helpe me, not very thankfully' (quod I).

communem: ita coactus est ille bonus princeps, nouo regno cuiquam ex amicis relicto (qui breui etiam post eiectus est) antiquo esse contentus;—praeterea si ostenderem omnes hos conatus bellorum, quibus tot nationes eius causa tumultuarentur, quum thesauros eius exhausissent, ac destruxissent populum, aliqua tandem fortuna frustracessuros tamen; proinde auitum regnum coleret, ornaret quantum posset, et faceret quam florentissimum; amet suos et ametur a suis; 57 cum his una uiuat, imperetque suauiter | atque alia regna ualere sinat, quando id quod nunc ei contigisset satis amplum superque esset:—hanc orationem quibus auribus, mi More, putas² excipiendam? Profecto non ualde pronis, inquam.

¹ That is, the French king's.

² This is the conclusion of the long sentence begun above, p. 82. It is followed, or rather resumed after a short break, by another and still more lengthy one, beginning with Si consiliariis . . . and not ending till we reach the words quam surdis essem narraturus fabulam, p. 97.

'Wel, let vs procede then' (quod he). 'Suppose that some kyng and his counsell were together whettinge their wittes, and deuisinge what subtell crafte they myght inuente to enryche the king with greate treasures of money. First one councelleth to rayse and enhance the valuacion of money, when the king must paye any; and agayne to calle downe the value of coyne to lesse then it is worthe, when he must receiue or gather any: for thus great sommes shalbe payde with a lytyll money, and where lytle is due muche shalbe receaued¹. An other counselleth to fayne warre, that when vnder this coloure and pretence the kyng hath gathered great aboundaunce of money, he maye, when it shall please hym, make peace wyth great solempnitie and holye ceremonies, to blynde the eyes of the poore commualtie, as taking pitie and

Pergamus ergo, inquit. Si consiliariis cum rege quopiam tractantibus², et comminiscens quibus technis ei queant coaceruare thesauros, dum unus intendendam consulit aestimationem monetae, quum ipsi sit eroganda pecunia, deiiciendam rursus infra iustum, quum fuerit corroganda, uti et multum aeris paruo dissoluat, et pro paruo multum recipiat: dum alius suadet ut bellum simulet, atque eo praetextu coacta pecunia, cum uisum erit, faciat pacem sanctis ceremoniis, quo plebeculae oculis fiat praestigium, miseratus uidelicet

¹ One instance of the practice described is furnished by Edward IV, who brought in two new coins, termed the angel and angelot, in place of the noble and half-noble. Though considerably inferior in weight to the former pieces, they were ordered to pass for the same value, namely, 6s. 8d. and 3s. 4d. (Eccleston: Introd. to English Antiquities, 1847, p. 206). Henry VII is said never to have debased his coinage; but by calling in all 'minished or impaired coins' and receiving them at the Mint by weight, without any allowance made, he secured a great profit (Bacon's Works, ed. Spedding, vi. p. 223; Traill's Social England, ii. p. 558). An American writer says that Henry VIII and Edward VI so debased their coinage, that 'it is impossible to learn or estimate their weight, fineness or value.' See A. M. Smith's Encyclopaedia of Gold and Silver Coins, 1886, pp. 252, 254. The proverb 'Testers are gone to Oxford to study at Brasenose' (testers, or shillings, being first coined in 1504), will occur to the reader. It might itself have been coined by More.

² In this intransitive sense of 'debate,' 'discuss,' the word is found in Suetonius and Tacitus. Comp. Tac. Ann. i. 13, 'Augustus . . . cum tractaret, quinam,' &c.

compassion Gode wote^a vpon mans bloude, lyke a louing and a mercifull prince¹.

'An other putteth the kyng in remembraunce of certeyn olde and moughte-eaten lawes², that of long tyme haue not bene put in execution; whiche, because no man can remembre that they were made, euerie man hath transgressed. The fynes of thies lawes he counselleth the kyng to require: for there is no waye so proffyttable, nor more honorable; as the whiche hath a shewe and coloure of iustice. An other aduyseth hym to forbidde manye thynges vnder great penalties and fines, specially suche thynges as is for the peoples profit not be vsed³; and

^a forsothe.

humanum sanguinem princeps pius: dum alius ei suggerit in mentem antiquas quasdam et tinea adesas leges, longa desuetudine antiquatas; quas quod nemo latas meminisset, omnes sint transgressi; earum ergo mulctas iubeat exigi; nullum uberiores prouentum esse, nullum magis honorificum, utpote qui iustitiae prae se personam ferat: dum ab alio admonetur, uti sub magnis mulctis multa prohibeat, maxime talia, quae ne fiant in rem sit populi; post

¹ For the subsidies demanded as each parliament met in Henry VII's reign, see the caustic remarks of Bishop Stubbs: Lectures on Medieval and Modern History, 1887, p. 409. The special instance More had in his mind may have been that of 1492, when two-tenths and two-fifteenths were being raised 'for the defence of Brittany against France.' The result was the expedition to Boulogne in October, 1492, after which the king made peace.

² Hallam, speaking of the insatiable avarice of Henry VII, mentions his having recourse to statutes passed in previous reigns, 'the pecuniary penalties of which, though exceedingly severe, were so little enforced as to have lost their terror.' 'These,' he adds, 'his ministers raked out from oblivion; and prosecuting such as could afford to endure the law's severity, filled his treasury with the dishonourable produce of amercements and forfeitures.'—Constitutional History, ch. i.

The names of Empson and Dudley are notorious in this association. But Morton himself, though it would not have been pleasing to More to admit it, was an agent in the same exactions.—See Bacon's Hist. of Hen. VII (Works), ed. 1730, iii. pp. 442, 487.

³ We should have expected 'not to be used.' Burnet gives the sense more perspicuously: 'especially such as were against the Interest of the People.'

afterward to dispence for money with them, which by this prohibicion susteyne losse and dammage. For by this meanes the fauour of the people is wonne, and proffite riseth two wayes: first by takyng forfaytes of them whom couetousnes of gaynes hath brought in daunger of thys statute; and also by sellynge preuyleges and licences; whiche the better that the prynce is forsothe, the deerer he selleth them; as one that is lothe to graunte to any pryuate persone any thyng that is agaynste the proffyt of hys people; and therefore maye sell none but at an exceding dere pryce.

‘An other giueth the kynge counsell to endaunger vnto hys grace the iudges of the Reyalme, that he maye haue them euer on hys syde; whyche muste^a in euerye matter despute and reason for the kynges rygth. And they muste be called into the kynges palace, and be desired to argue^b and discusse his matters in his owne presence. So there shalbe no matter of his, so openlye wronge and uniuste, wherin one or other of them, other because he wyll haue sumthyng to allege and obiecte, or that he is ashamed to saye that whiche is sayde already, or else to pike a thanke¹ with his prince, wyll not fynde some hole open to set pecunia cum illis dispenset, quorum commodis obstat interdictum; sic et a populo gratiam iniri, et duplex adferri compendium; uel dum hii mulctantur, quos quaestus cupiditas pellexit in casses, uel dum aliis uendit priuilegia tanto pluris quanto scilicet fuerit mellior⁵⁸ princeps, utpote qui grauatim quicquam contra populi commodum priuato cuique indulgeat, et ob id non nisi magno precio: dum alius ei persuadet obstringendos sibi iudices, qui quauis in re pro regio iure disceptent; accersendos praeterea in palatium, atque inuitandos uti coram se de suis rebus disserant; ita nullam causam eius tam aperte iniquam fore, in qua non aliquis eorum uel contradicendi studio, uel pudore dicendi eadem, uel quo gratiam incant, apud eam

^a and that they maye. ^b Yea and further to call them into his palace, and to require them there to argue.

¹ That is, to be a pick-thanks, or fawning parasite. See the Glossary.

a snare in, wherewith to take the contrarie parte in a trippe¹. Thus whiles the iudges cannot agree amonges themselves, reasoning and arguing of that which is playne enough, and bringing the manifest trewth in dowte, in the meane season the king may take a fyt occasion to vnderstand the lawe as shal most make for his aduauntage; wher vnto al other for shame or for feare wil agree. Then the Judges maye be bolde to pronounce of the kynges side. For he that geueth sentence for the kyng cannot be without a good excuse. For it shalbe sufficient for hym to haue equitie of^a his part, or the bare wordes of the lawe, or a wrythen and wrested vnderstandynge of the same, or els, whiche with good and iust Judges is of greater force then all lawes be, the kynges indisputable prerogatiue. To conclude, al the counsellours agre and consent together with the riche Crassus², that no abundance of gold can be sufficient for a prince, which muste kepe and maynteyne an armie: furthermore that a kyng, though he would, aliquam reperiant rimam, qua possit intendi calumnia; sic dum iudicibus diuersa sentientibus res per se clarissima disputatur, et ueritas in quaestionem uenit, ansam commodum³ regi dari pro suo commodo ius interpretandi; caeteros aut pudore accessuros aut metu; sic intrepide fertur postea pro tribunali sententia; neque enim deesse praetextus potest pronuncianti pro principe: nempe cui satis est aut aequitatem a sua parte esse, aut uerba legis, aut contortum scripti sensum, aut quae legibus denique omnibus praeponderat apud religiosos iudices, principis indisputabilem praerogatiuam; dum omnes in Crassiano illo Crassi diuitis dictum.

^a on.

consentiunt atque conspirant, Nullam auri uim satis esse principi, cui sit alendus exercitus; praeterea nihil inuste regem facere, ¹ Lit. 'whereby a false accusation may be directed.' I do not remember to have seen the phrase calumniam intendere used.

² The saying here attributed to the 'riche Crassus' (M. Licinius Crassus Dives, the contemporary of Cicero), seems to be a reminiscence of what is told in Pliny, Hist. Nat. xxxiii. 10, that 'M. Crassus negabat locupletem esse, nisi qui redditu annuo legionem tueri posset.'

³ Robynson seems to have taken this as if meant for commodam; but it is the adverb, 'opportunely.'

can do nothyng uniustly; for all that men haue, yea also the men them selves, be all his; and that euery man hath so much of his owne as the kynges gentilnes hath not taken from hym; and that it shalbe moste for the kynges aduantage that his subiectes haue very lytle or nothing in their possession; as whose sauegarde dothe herein consiste, that his people do not waxe wanton and wealthie through riches and libertie; because, where thies thinges be, there men be not wonte patientlye to obeye harde, vniuste, and vnlawfull commaundementes; where as, on the other part, neade and pouertie doth holde downe and kepe vnder stowte courages, and maketh them patient perforce, takyng from them bolde and rebellynge stomakes.

'Here agayne if I should ryse vp, and boldelye affirme that all thies counselles be to the kyng dishonoure and reproche, whoes honoure and sauitie is more and rather supported and vpholden by the wealth and ryches of his people, then by hys owne treasures; and if I shuld declare that the comminaltie chueseth their king for their owne sake and not for his sake¹; for this^a intent that through ^a to the.

ut maxime etiam uelit posse, quippe omnia omnium eius esse, ut homines etiam ipsos, tantum uero cuique esse proprium quantum regis benignitas ei non ademerit, quod ipsum ut quam minimum sit principis multum referre, ut cuius tutamen tum in eo situm sit, ne populus diuitiis ac libertate lasciuat, | quod hae res minus patienter 59 ferant dura atque iniusta imperia; quum contra egestas atque inopia retundat animos ac patientes reddat, adimatque pressis generosos rebellandi spiritus:—hic si ego rursus adsurgens contendam haec consilia omnia regi et inhonesta esse et perniciosa, cuius non honor modo sed securitas quoque in populi magis opibus sita sit quam suis; quos si ostendam regem sibi deligere sua causa, non regis, uidelicet

¹ This thesis, under different forms, was made the subject of several epigrams by More. The very titles of some of them have a bold look, to be written under a Tudor dynasty; for instance, 'Populus consentiens

regnum dat et aufert':—

Quicumque multis uir uiris unus praeest,

Hoc debet his quibus praeest:

Praeesse debet neutiquam diutius,

Hi quam uolent quibus praeest.

his labour and studie they might al liue wealthily, sauffe from wronges and iniuries; and that therfore the kynge ought to take more care for the wealthe of his people, then for his owne wealthe, euen as the office and dewtie of a shepherde is, in that he is a shepherd, to feade his shepe rather then hymself¹. For as towchyng this, that they thinke the defence and mayntenaunce of peace to consist in the pouertie of the people, the thyng it self sheweth that they be farre owt of the way. For where shall a man finde more wrangling, quarelling, brawling, and chiding, then among beggers? Who be more disierous of newe mutations and alterations, then they that be not content with the present state of their lyfe? Or, finally, who be bolder stomaked to brynge all in hurlieburlye (therby trustyng to get sum wyndfall), then they that haue nowe nothing to leese? And if so be that there were any kyng, that were^a so smallye regarded, or so^b behated of his subiectes, that other wayes he coulde not kepe them in awe, but onlie by open wronges, by pollinge and shauinge, and by brynginge them to beggerie; sewerly it were better for

^a And yf any King were.

^b and so lightly esteemed, yea so.

uti eius labore ac studio ipsi commode uiuant tutique ab iniuriis; eoque magis ad principem eam pertinere curam, ut populo bene sit suo, quam ut sibi; non aliter ac pastoris officium est oues potius quam semet pascere, quatenus opilio est: nam quod populi egestatem censeant pacis praesidium esse, longissime aberrare eos ipsa res docet: nempe ubi plus rixarum comperias quam inter mendicos? quis intentius mutationi rerum studet, quam cui minime placet praesens uitae status? aut cui denique audacior impetus ad conturbanda omnia, spe alicunde lucrandi, quam cui iam nihil est quod possit perdere? quod si rex aliquis adeo aut contemptus esset aut inuisus suis, ut aliter eos continere in officio non possit, nisi contumeliis, compilatione et sectione grassetur², eosque redigat ad mendicitatem,

¹ Comp. Ezek. xxxiv. 2, and Plato's Repub. (Jowett's translation), i. § 343, 'You fancy that the shepherd or neatherd fattens or tends the sheep or oxen with a view to their own good, and not to the good of himself or his master.'

² Lit. 'Unless he were to proceed

hym to forsake hys kyngdome, then to holde it by this meanes ; whereby, though the name of a kyng be kept, yet the maiestie is lost. For it is against the dignitie of a kyng to haue rule ouer beggers, but rather ouer ryche and welthie men. Of thys mynde was the hardie and couragius¹ Fabrice, when he sayde that he had rather be a ruler of ryche men then be ryche hymselfe². And verelye one man to lyue³ in pleasure and wealth, whyles all other wepe and smarte for it, that is the parte not of a kyng but of a iayler.

‘To be shorte, as he is a folyshe phisition, that cannot cure his patientes disease, onles he caste hym in an other syckenes ; so he that cannot amend the liues of his subiectes, but be taking from them the wealth and commoditie of lyfe, he must nedes graunte that he knoweth not the praestiterit illi profecto regno abdicare, quam his retinere artibus, quibus quanquam imperii nomen retineat, certe amittit maiestatem : neque enim regiae dignitatis est. imperium in mendicos exercere, sed in opulentos potius atque felices ; quod ipsum sensit certe uir erecti ac sublimis animi Fabricius, cum responderet malle se imperare diuitibus quam diuitem esse : et profecto unum aliquem 60 uoluptate ac deliciis fluere, gementibus undique ac lamentantibus aliis, hoc non est regni, sed carceris, esse custodem : denique ut imperitissimus medicus est, qui morbum nescit nisi morbo curare, ita qui uitam ciuium non nouit alia uia corrigere, quam ademptis uitae commodis, is se nescire fateatur imperare liberis : quin aut

by way of,’ &c. Sectio is quite classical in the sense of parcelling out confiscated goods.

¹ These epithets are a little wide of the Latin. ‘A Man of a noble and exalted Temper’ (Burnet).

² The anecdote is found in Valerius Maximus, iv. 5, only the saying is there ascribed to M. Curius Dentatus, who defeated Pyrrhus in B.C. 275. The envoys of the Samnites were bidden to report that Curius ‘malle locupletibus imperare, quam ipsum fieri locupletem.’ Fabricius is mentioned in the same chapter, as having gone as an ambassador to Pyrrhus, and as having prayed (on hearing a description of Epicurus’s doctrines from Cineas) that Pyrrhus and the Samnites might embrace that philosophy.

³ Lat. fluere, ‘to abound,’ ‘to be in affluence.’

feate howe to gouerne fre^a men. But let hym rather amende hys owne lyfe, renounce vn honest pleasures, and forsake pride. For thies be the chiefe vices that cause hym to runne in the contempt or hatered of his people. Let him lyue of hys owne, hurtinge no man. Let him do coste not aboute his power. Let hym restreyne wyckednes. Let hym preuente vices, and take a waye the occasions of offences be well orderyng his subiectes, and not by sufferying wickednes to increase, afterward to be punyshed. Let hym not be to hastie in callynge agayne¹ lawes, whiche a custome hathe abrogated; speciallye suche as haue bene long forgotten and neuer lacked nor needed. And let hym neuer vnder the cloke and pretence of transgression take suche fynes and forfaytes, as no Iudge wyll suffre a priuate persone to take, as uniuste and ful of gyle².

‘Here if I should brynge furth before them the lawe of the Macariens³, whiche be not farre distaunt from Vtopia;

^a fre omitted⁴.

inertiam potius mutet suam, aut superbiam: nam his fere utiis accidit, ut populus sum uel contemnat uel habeat odio: uiuat innocuus de suo; sumptus ad reditus accommodet; refrenet maleficia, et recta institutione suorum praeueniat potius, quam sinat increscere quae deinde puniat; leges abrogatas consuetudine haud temere reuocet, praesertim quae diu desitae nunquam desyderatae sunt; neque unquam commissi nomine eiusmodi quicquam capiat, quale priuatum quempiam iudex, uelut iniquum ac uafum, non pateretur accipere: hic si proponerem illis Macarensium legem, qui et ipsi non longe admodum absunt ab Vtopia, quorum rex quo primum die auspicatur imperium,

Mira lex Macarensium.

¹ That is, recalling, or reviving.

² The case of alderman Sir William Capel is an example in point, who ‘was condemned in the sum of £2,700 under certain obsolete penal laws, though he was allowed to compound with the king (Henry VII) for £1,600.’ Gairdner, as before, p. 151.

³ Τῶν Μακαρίων, ‘of the Blessed;’

perhaps with a reference to the Fortunatae Insulae, or Islands of the Blessed, with which Utopia, or at least Eutopia, would naturally be associated. Budé wrote concerning this latter that ‘it is in fact one of the Fortunate Isles, perhaps very close to the Elysian Fields.’—See above, p. lxxxix.

⁴ This omission must have been whose kynge, the daye of hys coronacion, is bounde by a solempne othe, that he shall neuer at anye tyme haue in hys treasure aboue a thousande pounce of golde or syluer¹. They saye a verye good kynge, whiche toke more care for the wealthe and commoditie of hys countrey, then for thenrychinge of himself, made this lawe to be a stop and a barre to kynges for heaping and hording vp so muche money as might impoueryshe their people. For he for-sawe that this som of treasure woulde suffice to supporte the kynge in battail against his owne people, if they shuld chaunce to rebell; and also to maintein his warres against the inuasions of hys forreyn enemies. Againe he perceiued the same stocke of money to be to litel, and vnsufficient to encourage and able^a hym wrongfullye to take a waye other mens goodes²; whyche was the chiefe cause whie

^a enable.

magnis adhibitis sacrificiis iurijurando astringitur, nunquam se uno tempore supra mille auri pondo in thesauris habiturum, aut argenti, quantum eius auri precium aequet: hanc legem ferunt ab optimo quodam rege institutam, cui maiori curae fuit patriae commodum, quam diuitiae suae, uelut obicem aceruandae pecuniae tantae, quanta faceret inopiam eius in populo: nempe eum thesaurum uidebat⁶¹ suffecturum, siue regi aduersus rebelleis, siue regno aduersus hostium incursiones esset confligendum; caeterum minorem esse quam ut animos faciat inuadendi aliena: quae potissima condendae legis accidental, as the Latin is liberis, 'freemen.' In More's epigram 'Quid inter Tyrannum et Principem,' Legitimus immanissimis

Rex hoc tyrannis interest:
Seruos tyrannus quos regit,
Rex liberos putat suos,

it is doubtful whether by liberos, as the antithesis of seruos, was meant 'freemen' or 'children.'

¹ Compare with this the £1,800,000 which Henry VII is said to have left in his coffers at his decease; a sum to be multiplied by 10, at least, to bring it to a modern equivalent. See Stubbs, Medieval and Modern History, p. 411; and Gairdner, as before, p. 209.

² The rendering is here a little clumsy. Burnet: 'He thought that moderate Sum might be sufficient for any Accident; if either the King had occasion for it against Rebels, or the Kingdom against the Invasion of an Enemy; but that it was not enough to encourage a Prince to invade other Men's Rights.' The last words perhaps point rather to 'foreign invasion.'

the lawe was made. An other cause was this. He thought that by thys prouision his people shuld not lacke money, wherewith to maynteyne their dayly occupieng and chaffayre. And seyng the kynge coulde not chewse but laye owt and bestowe all that came in aboue the prescript some of his stocke, he thought he woulde seke no occasions to doo hys subiectes iniurie. Suche a kynge shalbe feared of euell men, and loued of good men. Thies and suche other informatyons yf I should vse emonge men holy enclined and geuen to the contrarye part, how deaffe hearers, thyncke you, should I haue¹?’

‘Deaffe hearers douteles’ (quod I), ‘and in good faith no marueyle. And to speake as I thynke, truelye I can not a lowe that such communicatyon shall be vsed, or suche counsell geuen, as you be suere shall neuer be regarded nor receaued. For how can so straunge informations be profitable, or how can they be beaten into their headdes, whose myndes be all reddyed preuented with cleane contrarye perswasions? Thys schole² philosophie is not vnpleasaunte emonge fryndes in famylier communication; but in the counselles of kynges, where greate causa fuit: proxima, quod sic prospectum putauit, ne desit pecunia, quae in quotidiana ciuium commutatione uersetur, et quum regi necesse est erogare, quicquid thesauro supra legitimum accreuit modum, non quaesiturum censuit occasionem iniuriae: talis rex et malis erit formidini, et a bonis amabitur,—haec ergo atque huiusmodi si ingererem apud homines in contrariam partem uehementer inclinatos, quam surdis essem narraturus fabulam?

Surdissimis, inquam, haud dubie; neque hercule miror, neque mihi uidentur (ut uere dicam) huiusmodi sermones ingerendi, aut talia danda consilia, quae certus sis nunquam admissum iri. Quid enim prodesse possit, aut quomodo in illorum pectus influere sermo tam insolens, quorum praeoccupauit animos atque insedit penitus

¹ See note above, p. 87.

² Lat. scholastica. We might now say ‘academic;’ or, as Burnet puts it, ‘this philosophical Way of Speculation.’

matters be debated and reasoned wyth great aucthorytye, thies thynges haue no place.'

'That is yt whyche I mente' (quod he), 'when I said phylosophye hadde no place amonge kinges.' 'In dede' (quod I) 'this schole philosophie hath not; whiche thinketh all thynges mete for euery place. But ther is an other philosophye more cyuyle, whyche knoweth as ye wolde saye her owne stage, and thereafter orderynge and behauynge herselfe in the playe that she hathe in hande, playethe her parte accordynglye wyth comlynes, vtteringe nothyng owte of dewe ordre and fassyon. And thys ys the phylosophye that yowe muste vse. Orels, whyles a commodye¹ of Plautus is playenge, and the vyle bondemen skoffynge and tryfelynge amonge them selves, yf yowe shoulde sodenlye come vpon the stage in a philosophers apparrell, and rehearse owte of Octauia the place wherin Seneca dysputeth with Nero²; had it not bene

Philosophia
scholastica.

diuersa persuasio? Apud amicos in familiari colloquio non insuauis est haec philosophia scholastica.

Hoc est, inquit ille, quod dicebam, non esse apud principes locum philosophiae. Imo, inquam, est uerum, non huic scholasticae, quae quiduis putet ubiuis conuenire; sed est alia philosophia ciuiliior, quae suam nouit scenam, eique sese^a accommodans in ea fabula, quae in manibus est, suas | partes concinne et cum 62 decoro tutatur. Hac utendum est tibi. Alioquin dum agitur quaeδμοίαισιν mira. piam Plauti comoedia, nugantibus inter se uernulis, si tu in proscenium prodeas habitu philosophico, et recenseas ex Octauia locum in quo Seneca disputat cum Nerone, nonne

^a sit, A.

¹ This way of spelling comedy may be due to the Greek κωμῳδία, but is more likely the result of unconscious assimilation of the vowels.

² The passage referred to is in the second act of Seneca's Octavia. The following lines will serve as a sample:—

Ner. Inertis est, nescire quid liceat sibi.
Sen. Id facere, laus est, quod decet, non. quod licet.

Ner. Calcat iacentem vulgus. Ner. Inuisum opprimet.

More could speak from his own experience of 'sodenly coming upon the stage;' as Roper tells us that, in his better for yowe to haue played the domme persone¹, then by rehersynge that, which serued nother for the tyme nor place, to haue made suche a tragycall comedye or gally-malfreye²? For by bryngynge in other stufte that nothyng apperteyneth to the presente matter, yowe must nedys marre and peruert the play that ys in hande, thoughe the stufte that yowe brynge be muche better. What parte soeuer yowe haue taken vpon yowe, playe that as well as yowe canne, and make the beste of yt; and doo not therefore dysturbe and brynge owt of ordre the hole matter, bycause that an othere, whyche is meryere and bettere, cummeth to yowre remembraunce.

'So the case stonde the in a common wealthe; and so yt ys in the consultatyon of Kynges and prynces. Yf euell opynyons and noughty persuasions can not be vtterly and quyte plucked owte of their hartes; if you can not euen as you wold remedye vyces, whiche vse and custome hath confirmed; yet for this cause yow must not leaue and forsake the common wealthe; yow must not forsake the shippe in a tempeste, bycause yowe can not rule and kepe praestiterit egisse mutam personam, quam aliena recitando talem fecisse tragicomoediam? Corrueris enim κωφὸν πρόσωπον.

peruerterisque praesentem fabulam, dum diuersa permisces etiam si ea quae tu affers meliora fuerint. Quaecunque fabula in manu est, eam age quam potes optime; neque ideo totam perturbes, quod tibi in mentem uenit alterius quae sit lepidior.

Sic est in Republica, sic in consultationibus principum. Si radicibus euelli non possint opiniones pravae, nec receptis usu uitii mederi queas ex animi tui sententia, non ideo tamen deserenda Respublica est, et in tempestate nauis destituenda est, quoniam youthful days, 'at Christmas tyd (he would) sodenly sometymes stepp in among the players, and, never studyng for the matter, make a parte of his owne there presently amonge them, which made the lookers on more sport than all the players besid.'

¹ The muta persona. See the marginal note to the Latin.

² Gallimawfrey is properly a dish made up of various meats minced together; then metaphorically for a confused jumble of things. See the Glossary.

downe the wyndes. No, nor yow muste not labour to dryue into their heades newe and straunge informatyons¹, whyche yow knowe well shalbe nothyng regarded wyth them that be of cleane contrary mindes. But you must with a crafty wile and a subtell trayne studye and endeouere your selfe, asmuch as in yow lyethe, to handle the matter wyttelye and handsomelye for the purpose; and that whyche yowe can not turne to good, so to order it that it be not very badde. For it is not possible for all thynges to be well, onles all men were good: which I thinke wil not be yet thys good many yeares.'

'By thys meanes' (quod he) 'nothyng elles wyll be broughte to passe, but, whyles that I goo abowte to remedy the madnes of others, I should be euen as madde as they. For if I wolde speake thynges^a that be trewe, I muste neades speake suche thinges. But as for to speake false thynges, whether that be a philosophers part, or no, I can not tell; truly it is not my part. Howebeit thys communicatyon of myne, thoughe peradventure it maye seme vnpleasaunte to them, yett can I not see whie it should seme straunge, or foolisshelye newfangled. If so be that uentos inhibere non possis. at neque insuetus et insolens sermo inculcandus, quem scias apud diuersa persuasos pondus non habiturum; sed obliquo ductu conandum est atque adnitendum tibi, uti pro tua uirili omnia tractes commode, et quod in bonum nequis uertere, efficias saltem ut sit quam minime malum. Nam ut omnia bene sint fieri non potest, nisi omnes boni sint: quod ad aliquot abhinc annos adhuc non expecto.

^a suche thynges.

Hac, inquit, arte nihil fieret aliud, quam ne dum aliorum furori mederi studeo, ipse cum illis insaniam. Nam si uera loqui uolo, talia loquar necesse est. Caeterum falsa loqui, sit ne philosophi, nescio: 63 certe non est meum. Quanquam ille meus sermo ut fuerit fortasse ingratus illis atque molestus, ita non uideo cur uideri debeat usque

¹ 'Discourses' (Burnet).

I shoulde speake those thynges that Plato fayneth in hys weale publique, or that the vtopians do in theires; thies thynges thoughe they were (as they be in dede) better, yet they myghte seme spoken owt of place; for a smuch^a as here amonges us, euerye man hath hys possessyons seuerall to hymselfe, and there all thynges be common.

'But what was in my communication conteyned, that mighte not and oughte not in anye place to be spoken? sauynge that to them whyche haue throughlye decreed and determind with them selves to rome^b hedlonges the contrary waye, it can not be acceptable and plesaunt; bicause it calleth them backe, and sheweth them the ieopardies. Verilye yf all thynges that euell and vitiose maners haue caused to seme inconueniente and noughte should be refused, as thynges vnmete and reprochfull, then we must emong Christen people wyncke at¹ the moste parte of all those thynges whyche Christe taughte vs, and so streytlye forbadde them to be wyncked at, that those thynges also whyche he whispered in the eares of ^a as much.

^b runne.

ad ineptias insolens. Quod si aut ea dicerem, quae fingit Plato in sua Republica, aut ea quae faciunt Vtopienses in sua, haec quamquam essent, ut certe sunt, meliora, tamen aliena uideri possint, quod hic singulorum priuatae sunt possessiones, illic omnia sunt communia.

Vtopiensium
instituta.

Mea uero oratio², nisi quod ad eos qui statuissent secum ruere diuersa uia praecipites iucundus esse non potest, qui reuocet ac praemonstret pericula, alioquin quid habuit, quod non ubiuis dici uel conueniat uel oporteat? Equidem si omittenda sunt omnia tanquam insolentia atque absurda, quaecunque peruersi mores hominum fecerunt ut uideri possint aliena, dissimulemus oportet apud Christianos pleraque omnia quae CHRISTVS docuit, ac dissimulari usqueadeo uetuit, ut ea quoque quae ipse in aures insusurrasset suis, palam in tectis

¹ That is, connive at the neglect of; or, as Burnet puts it, 'give over pressing.'

² There is here a confusion of two constructions, oratio . . . iucunda, and meus uero sermo (the reading of ed. 1563 iucundus).

hys dyscyples, he commaunded to be proclaymed in open howses¹. And yet the most parte of them is moore dissident from the maners of the worlde nowe a dayes then my communicayon was. But preachers, slye and wilie men, followynge your counsell (as I suppose), bicause they saw men euell willing to frame theyr manners to Christes rule, they haue wrested and wriede hys doctryne, and lyke a rule of leade haue applyed yt to mennys maners²; that by some meanes at the leaste waye they myghte agree to gether. Wherby I can not see what good they haue doone, but that men may more sickerlye be euell. And I truelye shoulde preuaile euen asmuche^a in kinges counselles. For other I muste saye other wayes then they saye, and then I were as good to saye nothyng; or els I muste saye thesame that they saye, and (as Mitio saieth in Terence³) helpe to further their madnes. For that craftye wyle and subtill traine of yours, I can not perceaue

^a as little.

iusserit praedicari. Quorum maxima pars ab istis moribus longe est alienior quam mea fuit oratio: nisi quod concionatores, homines callidi, tuum illud consilium secuti, puto, quando mores suos homines ad CHRISTI normam grauatim paterentur aptari, doctrinam eius uelut regulam plumbeam accommodauerunt ad mores, ut aliquo saltem pacto coniungerentur scilicet⁴. qua re nihil uideo quid profecerint, nisi ut securius liceat esse malos; atque ipse profecto tantundem proficiam in consiliis principum. Nam aut diuersa sentiam, quod 64 perinde fuerit ac si nihil sentiam; aut eadem, et ipsorum adiutor sim, ut inquit Mitio Terentianus, insaniae. Nam obliquus ille ductus non uideo quid sibi uelit, quo censes adnitendum, si non possint omnia

¹ Lat. palam in tectis, 'openly on the house-tops.' Comp. St. Luke xii. 3.

² Compare what Dr. Richard Sibbes wrote of the rule of faith, that 'it is a fixt and unchangeable rule, and therefore we must bring all to it, not it to all.' Exposition of Phil. III., 1639, p. 170.

³ Ter. Adelphi, i. 2. 65:—'Verum si

augeam, Aut etiam adiutor sim eius iracundiae, Insaniam profecto cum illo.' Burnet omits the reference to Terence altogether.

⁴ The position of scilicet at the end of a sentence is not uncommon in Plautus. Comp. Captivi, ii. 2. 33, 'Nunc uivatne, necne, id Orcum scire oportet scilicet.'

to what purpose it serueth; wherewyth yow wolde haue me to studdy and endeuoure my selfe, yf all thynges can not be made good, yet to handle them wittily and handsomely for the purpose; that, as farre furth as is possible, they maye not be very euell. For there¹ is no place to dissemble in nor to wincke in. Noughtye counselles must be openlye allowed, and verye pestylent decrees muste be approued. He shalbe cowntede worse then a spye, yea almoste as euell as a traytoure, that wyth a faynte harte doth prayse euell and noyesome decrees.

‘Moreouer a man canne haue no occasyon too doo good, chauncynge into the companye of them, whyche wyll sonere make noughte^a a good man, then be made good themselves; through whose euell companye he shalbe marred, or els yf he remayne good and innocent, yett the wyckednes and folysshenes^b of others shalbe imputed to hym, and layde in hys necke³. So that yt is impossyble wyth

^a peruerte.

^b folye.

reddi bona, tamen ut tractentur commode, fiantque quoad licet quam minime mala. Quippe non est ibi dissimulandi locus, nec licet connuere: approbanda sunt aperte pessima consilia, et decretis pestilentissimis subscribendum est. Speculatoris uice fuerit, ac pene proditoris etiam, qui improbe consulta maligne laudauerit.

Porro nihil occurrit in quo prodesse quicquam possis, in eos delatus collegas, qui uel optimum uirum facilius corruperint quam ipsi corrigantur; quorum peruersa consuetudine uel deprauaberis, uel ipse integer atque innocens alienae malitiae stultitiaeque praetexeris;

¹ The word ‘there’ is emphatic, answering to the Latin ibi. Burnet brings out the sense more clearly: ‘For in Courts they will not bear with a Man’s holding his Peace, or conniving at what others do.’

² Lat maligne. Compare the sub luce maligna of Virgil. The expression means ‘to give a stinting approval to,’ or ‘damn with faint praise.’

³ To lay in one’s neck, or (as below, p. 251) to set in one’s neck, seems to imply fastening on, or imputing; the metaphor being derived from setting on dogs to the neck of a hunted animal. The Romans had a similar usage: ‘Cogitabat legiones ad Urbem adducere, et in cervicibus nostris collocare.’ — Cic. Ad Fam. xii. 23.

that craftye wyele and subtell trayne to turne anny thing to better.

'Wherfore Plato by a goodly simylitude declareth whie wise men refreyn to medle in the common wealthe¹. For when they see the people swarm in to the stretes, and dailie wett to the skin wyth rayne, and yet can not persuade them to goo owt of the rayne, and to take their houses; knowynge well that if they shoulde goo owte to them, they shoulde nothyng preuayle, nor wynne ought by it, but be^a wett also in the rain; they do kepe them selves within their howses; beyng content that they be saffe them selves, seyng they can not remedye the follye of the people.

'Howe be it dowteles, mayster Moore (to speke truelye as my mynde geueth² me), where soeuer^b possessyons be pryuate, where moneye beareth all the stroke³, it is hard tantum abest ut aliquid possit in melius obliquo illo ductu conuertere.

^a but with them be.

^b soeuer omitted.

Quam ob rem pulcherrima similitudine declarat Plato, cur merito sapientes abstineant a capessenda Republica. Quippe quum populum uideant in plateas effusum assiduis imbribus perfundi, nec persuadere queant illis ut se subducant pluuiæ, tectaque subeant; gnari nihil profuturos sese si exeant, quam ut una compluantur, semet intra tecta continerent; habentes satis, quando alienae stultitiæ non possunt mederi, si ipsi saltem sint in tuto.

Quanquam profecto, mi More (ut ea uere dicam, quæ meus animus fert) mihi uidetur, | ubicunque priuatae sunt possessiones, ubi omnes 65

¹ More gives the gist of the passage, which is found in the Republic, Bk. vi. § 496: 'Such a man keeps quiet and confines himself to his own concerns, like one who takes shelter behind a wall on a stormy day, when the wind is driving before it a hurricane of dust and rain; and when from his retreat he sees the infection of lawlessness spreading over the rest of mankind, he is well content, if he can in any way live his life here untainted in his own person by unrighteousness and unholy deeds' (Davies and Vaughan's Translation).

² We retain this idiom in the use of misgive: 'my mind misgave me.'

³ That is, 'has all the influence.' Halliwell illustrates this use of the word from Stanihurst's Description of and almoste impossyble that there the weale publyque maye iustelye be gouerned and prosperouslye floryshe. Onles you thynke thus: that Iustyce is there executed, wher all thynges come into the handes of euell men; or that prosperytye their floryssheth, where all is deuyded amonge a fewe; whyche fewe neuerthesse do not leade their lyues very wealthely, and the resydewe lyue miserablye, wretchedlye, and beggerlye.

‘Wherefore when I consyder wyth my selfe, and weye in my mynde, the wyse and godlye ordynaunces of the Vtopyans, amonge whome wyth verye fewe lawes all thynges be so well and wealthelye ordered, that vertue is had in pryce and estimatyon; and yet, all thynges beyng ther common¹, euery man ha(t)h abundaunce of euery thyng: agayne, on the other part, when I compare wyth them so manye natyons euer makynge new lawes, yet none of them all well and suffycientlye furnysshed wyth lawes; where euery man calleth that he hath gotten hys owne proper and pryuate goodes; where so manye newe omnia pecuniis metiuntur, ibi uix unquam posse fieri ut cum Republica iuste agatur aut prospere, nisi uel ibi sentias agi iuste, ubi optima quaeque perueniunt ad pessimos, uel ibi feliciter, ubi omnia diuiduntur in paucissimos; nec illos habitos undecunque commode, caeteris uero plane miseris.

Quam ob rem quum apud animum meum reputo prudentissima atque sanctissima instituta Vtopiensium, apud quos tam paucis legibus tam commode res administrantur, ut et uirtuti precium sit, et tamen aequatis rebus omnia abundant omnibus; tum ubi his eorum moribus ex aduerso comparo tot nationes alias, semper ordinantes, nec ullam satis ordinatam unquam earum omnium, in quibus quod quisque nactus fuerit suum uocat priuatum; quorum tam multae indies con-

Ireland, p. 38—‘This house, as well for antiquitie as for the number of worshipful gentlemen that be of the surname, beareth no small stroke in the English pale of Ireland.’

¹ Of this, the basis of the Utopian

commonwealth, see the Introduction, p. xxxvi, n. 3. In addition to what is there said, the reader may be referred to some sensible remarks by Dr. W. Cunningham, in his Growth of English Industry, 1890, p. 94 n.

lawes daylye made be not suffycyente for euerye man to enioye, defend, and knowe from an other mans that whych he calleth his owne; which thyng the infynyte controuersies in the lawe, that daylye ryse^a neuer to be ended, playnly declare to be trewe: thies thynges (I say) when I consider with me selfe, I holde well with Plato, and doo no thyng marueyll that he wolde make no lawes for them that refused those lawes, wherby all men shoulde haue and enioye equall portions of welthes and commodities¹. For the wise man dyd easely forsee, that thys is the one and onlye waye to the wealthe of a communaltey, yf equaltey of all thynges sholde be broughte in and stablyshed. Whyche I thynke is not possible to be obserued, where euerye mans gooddes be proper and peculyare to him selfe. For where euerye man vnder certeyne tytles and pretences draweth and plucketh to himselfe asmuch as he can, and so^b a fewe deuide amonge themselves all

^a dayle rysyng.

^b so that.

ditae leges non sufficiunt uel ut consequatur quisquam, uel ut tueatur, uel ut satis internoscat ab alieno illud quod suum inuicem quisque priuatum nominat: id quod facile indicant infinita illa tam assidue nascentia quam nunquam finienda litigia:—haec, inquam, dum apud me consydero, aequior Platoni fio, minusque demiror dedignatum illis leges ferre ullas, qui recusabant eas quibus ex aequo omnes omnia partirentur commoda. Siquidem facile praeuidit homo prudentissimus, unam atque unicam illam esse uiam ad salutem publicam, si rerum indicatur aequalitas; quae nescio an unquam possit obseruari, ubi sua sunt singulorum | propria. Nam quum certis 66 titulis quisque quantum potest ad se conuertit, quantacunque fuerit rerum copia, eam omnem pauci inter se partiti reliquis relinquunt

¹ The story is told by Diog. Laertius, De Vitis Philosoph., ed. 1594, p. 200 C. 'Refert Pamphila in vigesimo quinto Commentariorum, Arcadas ac Thebanos, condita ciuitate ingentis magnitudinis, rogasse illum ut eam rempublicam instrueret: quos quum ille didicisset aequalitatem sectari nolle,

profectum non esse' (Lat. tr.). More may, however, have taken the anecdote from Aelian, Var. Hist. ii. 42. Neither author mentions that the state in question was the newly-founded Megalopolis in Arcadia, though Laertius hints as much, by calling it μεγάλην πόλιν.

the riches that there is ^a, be there neuer so muche abundance and stoure, there to the resydewe is lefte lacke and pouertye¹. And for the moste parte yt chaunceth that thys latter sort is more worthye to enioye that state of wealth, then the other be; bycause the rych men be couetous, craftye, and vnprofytable²: on the other parte, the poore be lowlye, symple, and by their daily labour more profytable to the common welthe then to them selves.

'Thus I doo fullye persuade me selfe, that no equall and iuste distrybutyon of thynges can be made; nor that perfecte wealth shall euer be among men; onles this propriety be exiled and bannished. But so long as it shal

^a all the whole riches³.

inopiam; fereque accidit ut alteri sint alterorum sorte dignissimi; quum illi sint rapaces, improbi atque inutiles; contra hi modesti uiri ac simplices, et cotidiana industria in publicum quam in semet benigniores.

Adeo mihi certe persuadeo, res aequabili ac iusta aliqua ratione distribui, aut feliciter agi cum rebus mortalium, nisi sublata prorsus proprietate, non posse; sed manente illa, mansuram semper apud

¹ Latimer repeats More's complaint, but he will not admit the cause of the evil to be the same. 'And here,' he says, 'I have occasion to speak of the proprieties of things: for I fear, if I should leave it so, some of you would report me wrongfully, and affirm that all things should be common. I say not so. Certain it is that God hath ordained proprieties of things, so that that which is mine is not thine; and what thou hast I cannot take from thee. If all things were common, there could be no theft, and so this commandment, Non facies furtum, "Thou shalt not steal," were in vain.' The true communism, he continues, is that taught us by St. Paul: Sitis necessitatibus sanctorum communicantes; 'Help the necessity of those which be poor.' 'Our good is not so ours that we may do with it what us listeth; but we ought to distribute it to them which have need.'—Sermons, ed. 1844, pp. 406-407.

² This sounds rather rhetorical. But perhaps More had in mind a passage from the Menippus of Lucian, in which the trial of the rich is described. The crimes alleged against them are, in the words of his own translation, 'violentia, superbia, fastus, iniuriae.' Part of the penalty decreed by the Plutonian court is that their souls shall inhabit the bodies of asses on earth for 250,000 years.—See the Lucubrations, ed. 1563, p. 301.

³ The alteration seems to show that Robynson did not feel it right to make riches the subject of is. But he elsewhere uses the word as a singular, in the same form as the French richesse.

contynew, so long shal remayn among the most and best part of men the heuy and ineuitable burden of pouerty and wretchednes. Which, as I graunt that it may be sumwhat eased, so I vtterly deny that it can holy be taken away. For if ther wer a statute made, that no man should possesse aboute a certein measure of ground¹, and that no man should haue in his stocke aboute a prescripte and appointed some of money; if it were by certein lawes decreed that nother the king should be of to greate powre, nother the people to prowde^a and wealthye; and that offices shold not be obtained by inordinate suyte or by brybes and giftes; that they should nother be bought nor sold, nor that it sholde be nedeful for the officers to be at any cost or charge in their offices: for so occasion is geuen to the officers^b by fraud and rauin to gather vp their money again², and multo maximam multoque optimam hominum partem egestatis et erumnarum anxiam atque ineuitabilem sarcinam. Quam ut fateor leuari aliquantulum posse, sic tolli plane contendo non posse. Nempe si statuatur ne quis supra certum agri modum possideat, et uti sit legitimus cuique census pecuniae; si fuerit legibus quibusdam cautum, ut neque sit princeps nimium potens, neque populus nimis insolens; tum magistratus ne ambiantur, neu dentur uenum, aut sumptus in illis fieri sit necesse: alioquin et occasio datur per fraudem ac rapinas

^a haute.

^b geuen themy.

¹ Some limitation of this kind, as regards the acquisition of fresh farms by landed proprietors, was attempted by a bill of 1548. See the Introduction to the Discourse of the Common Weal of . . . England, ed. 1893, pp. xlvi, xlvii.

² That is, to recoup themselves for what they have had to lay out. Latimer, in his Fifth Sermon before King Edward VI (April 5, 1549), inveighed against the abuse which More here has in his mind:—'One will say, peradventure, "You speak unseemly and inconveniently, so to be against the officers for taking of rewards in doing pleasures. Ye consider not the matter to the bottom. Their offices be bought for great sums; now how should they receive their money again but by bribing? Ye would have them undone. Some of them gave two hundred pound, some five hundred pound, some two thousand pound: and how shall they gather up this money again [Robynson's phrase], but by helping themselves in their office"? Still more vigorously, in the Last Sermon before the King, he assails the takers of bribes in office, by reason of giftes and bribes the offices be geuen to rich men, which shoulde rather haue bene executed of wise men; by such lawes, I say, like as sicke bodies that be desperat and past cure, be wonte with continual good cherissing to be kept vp^a, so thies euellles also might be lightened and mytygated. But that they may be perfectlye cured and brought to a good and vpryght state, it is not to be hoped for, whiles euery man is maister of his owne to hym selfe. Yea, and whyles yow goo abowt to do your cure of one part, yow shall make bygger the sore of an other parte: so the healpe of one causeth anothers harme, for as much as nothyng can be geuen to annye man^b, onles that be taken from an other¹.

'But I am of a contrary opinion' (quod I) 'for me thynketh that men shal neuer there lyue wealthelye, where all thynges be commen. For how can there be abundaunce of gooddes, or of any thing, where euery man with draweth his hande from labour? whome the regarde

^a kept and botched vp for a time.

^b one.

sarciendae pecuniae, et fit necessitas eis muneribus praeficiendi diuites, quae potius fuerant administranda prudentibus: talibus, inquam, legibus, quemadmodum aegra assiduis solent fomentis fulciri corpora deploratae ualetudinis, ita haec quoque mala leniri queant ac mitigari: ut sanentur uero atque in bonum redeant habitum, nulla omnino
67 spes est, dum | sua cuique sunt propria. Quin dum unius partis curae studes, aliarum uulnus exasperaueris. ita mutuo nascitur ex alterius medela alterius morbus, quando nihil sic adiici cuiquam potest, ut non idem adimatur alii.

At mihi, inquam, contra uidetur, ibi nunquam commode uiui posse, ubi omnia sint communia. Nam quo pacto suppetat copia rerum, unoquoque ab labore subducente se; utpote quem neque sui quaestus and declares that 'it will never be merry in England, till we have the skins of such.' See pp. 185, 260 of Latimer's Sermons, as before.

¹ 'Remembering always the great, palpable, inevitable fact—the rule and root of all economy—that what one person has, another cannot have.' Ruskin: Unto this last, ed. 1893, p. 171. Compare also Bacon's dictum: 'what-soeuer is somewhere gotten is somewhere lost' (Essay of Seditions and Troubles), and the illustrative passages collected there by Mr. Reynolds.

of his owne gaines driueth not to woorke, and^a the hoope that he hath in other mens trauayles maketh hym slowthfull. Then when they be prycked with pouertye, and yet no man can by any law or right defend that for his owne, which he hath gotten wyth the laboure of his owne handes, shall not ther of necessitie be continuall sedition and bloodshede? specially the authoritie and reuerende of magistrates being taken away; which what place it maye haue wyth suche men, amonge whome is no difference, I can not deuise.' 'I maruell not' (quod he) 'that you be of this opinion. For you conceaue in your mynde other none at all, or els a very false ymage and symylytude of thys thyng¹. But yf yow hadde bene wyth me in Vtopia, and hadde presently sene their fasshions and lawes, as I dyd, whiche liued ther .v. yeares and moore, and wolde neuer haue commen thence, but only to make that new lande knowen here; then dowteles you wold

^a but.

urget ratio, et alienae industriae fiducia reddit segnem? At quum et stimulentur inopia, nec quod quisque fuerit nactus, id pro suo tueri ulla possit lege, an non necesse est perpetua caede ac seditione laboretur? sublata praesertim autoritate ac reuerentia magistratum; cui quis esse locus possit apud homines taleis, quos inter nullum discrimen est, ne comminisci quidem queo. Non miror, inquit, sic uideri tibi, quippe cui eius imago rei aut nulla succurrit aut falsa. Verum si in Vtopia fuisses mecum, moresque eorum atque instituta uidisses praesens, ut ego feci, qui plus annis quinque ibi uixi, neque unquam uoluisssem inde discedere, nisi ut nouum illum orbem prode-

¹ More, speaking in the person of Hythloday, does not meet the force of this objection directly. To find an answer to it, he points to the state of things prevailing in Utopia. The only possible answer to it would appear to be, that work should be done from new and higher motives, not from mere considerations of self-interest. So done, it would bring about the state of things in the socialist's dream:— 'All work is now pleasurable; either because of the hope of gain in honor and wealth, with which the work is done . . . or else, because it is grown into a pleasurable habit, as is the case with what you may call mechanical work.'—W. Morris: News from Nowhere, 1890, p. 127.

graunt, that you neuer sawe people well ordered, but only there.'

'Surely' (quod maister Peter), 'it shalbe harde for you to make me beleue, that ther is better order in that newe lande, then is here in thies countreys that wee knowe. For good wyttes be aswell here as there; and I thynke owr commen wealthes be auncienter than theires: wherin long vse and experience hath fownde owt many thinges commodious for mannes life, besides that many thinges here amonge vs haue bene founde by chaunce, whych no wytte colde euer haue deuysed.'

'As towchyng the auncytnes' (quod he) 'of common wealthes, than ¹ you might better iudge, if you had red the histories and chronicles of that lande; which if wee may beleue, cities were there, before there were men ^a here. Now what thinge soeuer hitherto by witte hath bene deuised, or found by chaunce, that myghte be aswell there as here. But I thinke verily, though it were so that we did passe them in witte, yet in studye and ^b laboursome endeuoure they farre passe vs. For (as there Cronicles rem; tum plane faterere populum recte institutum nusquam alibi te uidisse quam illic.

^a men were.

^b in trauaile and in.

Atqui profecto, inquit Petrus Aegidius, aegre persuadeas mihi, melius institutum populum in nouo illo quam in hoc noto nobis orbe reperiri; ut in quo neque deteriora ingenia et uetustiores opinor esse quam in illo Republicas, et in quibus plurima ad uitam commoda longus inuenit usus; ut ne adiciam apud nos casu reperta quaedam, quibus excogitandis nullum potuisset ingenium sufficere.

Quod ad uetustatem, inquit ille, rerum attinet publicarum, tum pronuntiare posses rectius, si historias illius orbis perlegisses; quibus si fides haberi debet, prius apud eos erant urbes quam homines apud nos. Iam uero quicquid hactenus uel ingenium inuenit, uel casus repperit, hoc utrobique potuit extitisse. Caeterum ego certe puto, ut illis praestemus ingenio, studio tamen atque industria longe a tergo relinquitur. Nam (ut ipsorum habent annales) ante appulsum illuc testifie) before our arriual ther they neuer harde any thinge of vs, whome they call the ultraequinoctiales; sauinge that ones about .M.CC. yeares ago, a certain shyppe was loste by the Ile of Vtopia whiche was driuen thither by tempest. Certeyn Romainys and Egyptyans¹ were caste on lande, whyche after that neuer wente thence.

¹ That is, then.

² More correctly, existere.

'Marke nowe what profite they tooke of thys one occasion, through delygence and earnesteste trauaile. There was no craft nor scyence within the impery² of Rome, wher of any proffite could rise, but they other lerned it of thies straungers, or els, of them takinge occasion to searche for yt, fownde it owte. So great proffyte was it to them that euer annye wente thyther from hence³. But yf annye lyke chaunce before thys hath brought any man from thence hether, that is as quyte out of remembraunce, as this also perchaunce in time to come shalbe forgotten that euer I was there. And like as they quickelye, almoste at the first nostrum de rebus nostris (quos illi uocant Vltraequinoctialeis) nihil unquam quicquam audierant, nisi quod olim annis abhinc ducentis supra mille, nauis quaedam apud insulam Vtopiam naufragio periit, quam tempestas eo detulerat. Eiecti sunt in littus Romani quidam, atque Aegyptii, qui postea nunquam inde discessere.

Hanc unam occasionem uide quam commodam illis sua fecit industria. Nihil artis erat intra Romanum imperium, unde possit aliquis esse usus, quod non illi aut ab expositis hospitibus didicerint, aut acceptis quaerendi seminibus adinuenerint. tanto bono fuit illis aliquos hinc semel illuc esse delatos. At siqua similis fortuna quempiam antehac illinc huc perpulerit, tam penitus hoc obliteratum est, quam istud quoque forsan excidet posteris, me aliquando illic fuisse. Et ut

¹ The joining of these two seems to point to a ship of Alexandria, such as conveyed St. Paul to Rome. 'About 1200 years' before the Utopia was written would bring us to the end of the reign of Diocletian (ob. A.D. 313); but it is not likely that More had any reason beyond mere fancy for naming this particular time.

² That is, empire (imperium).

³ This does not express the sense very well. Burnet has: 'So happily did they improve that Accident, of having some of our People cast upon their Shore.'

meting, made their owne, what so euer is among vs wealthe¹ deuysed; so I suppose it wold be longe befor we wolde receaue any thing that amonge them is better instytuted then amonge vs². And thys I suppose is the chiefe cause whie theyr common wealthes be wyselyere gouerned, and do florysh in more wealth then ours; though wee nother in wytte nor in^a ryches be ther inferiours.'

'Therefore, gentle maister Raphaell' (quod I) 'I praye you and beseche yow descrybe vnto vs the Iland. And study not to be shorte; but declare largely in order their groundes, there ryuers, their cities, their people, their manners, their ordenaunces, ther lawes, and, to be short, al thinges that you shal thinke vs desierous to knowe. And you shal thinke vs desierous to know what soeuer we knowe not yet.' 'There is nothing' (quod he) 'that I will

^a in omitted.

illi uno statim congressu quicquid a nobis commode inuentum est fecerunt suum; sic diu | futurum puto, priusquam nos accipiamus quicquam, quod apud illos melius quam nobis est institutum. Quod unum maxime esse reor in causa, cur quum neque ingenio neque opibus inferiores simus eis, ipsorum tamen res quam nostra prudentius administratur, et felicius efflorescat.

Ergo, mi Raphael, inquam, quaeso te atque obsecro, describe nobis insulam; nec uelis esse breuis, sed explices ordine agros, fluuios, urbes, homines, mores, instituta, leges, ac denique omnia quae nos putes uelle cognoscere: putabis autem uelle quicquid adhuc nescimus.

¹ That is, 'well.' See the Glossary.

² The slowness of our countrymen to adopt new ideas, or to admit improvements discovered by foreigners, has often been remarked. It is hard to select instances in so wide a field, but the proverb 'they manage these things better in France' may be readily illustrated—to take but a single example—from Evelyn's Diary. Compare his entries under Dec. 24, 1643, where he speaks of the flat stone pavement in the streets of Paris, and contrasts it with 'our pebles in London'; or under Aug. 30. 1653, where he describes the recent drainage works in the fens of Lincolnshire, suggested by similar works in Holland, at which the inhabitants, 'consisting of a poore and very lazy sort of people,' were much displeased.

do gladlier. For all these thinges I haue freshe in mind. But the matter requireth leasure.' 'Let vs go in therfor' (quod I) 'to dinner: afterward we will bestowe the time at our pleasure.' 'Content' (quod he) 'be it.' So we went in and dyed.

When diner was done, we came into the same place again, and sate vs downe vpon the same benche¹, commaunding oure seruantes that no man should trowble vs. Then I and maister Peter Giles desiered maister Raphael to performe his promise. He therefore seinge vs desierous and willinge to harken to him, when he had sit still and paused a litle while, musing and bethinkyng hymself, thus he began to speake.

The ende of the ffyrste boke.

Nihil, inquit, faciam libentius, nam haec in promptu habeo. Sed res ocium poscit. Eamus ergo, inquam, intro pransum: mox tempus nostro arbitrato sumemus. Fiat, inquit. Ita ingressi prandemus.

Pransi, in eundem reuersi locum, in eodem sedili consedimus, ac iussis ministris ne quis interpellaret, ego et Petrus Aegidius hortamur Raphaellem ut praestet quod erat pollicitus. Is ergo ubi nos uidit intentos atque auidos audiendi, quum paulisper tacitus et cogitabundus assedisset, hunc in modum exorsus est.

PRIMI LIBRI

FINIS^a.

^a Addunt A. et B. sequitur secundus.

¹ This may have been suggested by the way in which Cicero introduces the discourse, in the early part of his Brutus, § 24: 'Sed quo facilius sermo

explicetur, sedentes, si videtur, agamus. Quum idem placuisset illis, tum in pratulo propter Platonis statuam consedimus.'

REDUCED FACSIMILE OF THE WOODCUT OF THE ISLAND OF UTOPIA

The second

Boke of the communication of Raphael Hythlodaye, concerning the best state of a common wealthe: conteynyng the discription of Vtopia, with a large declaration of the Godly^a gouvernement, and of all the good lawes and orders of the same Ilande.

The Ilande of Vtopia conteyneth in breadthe in the myddell part of it (for there it is brodest) CC. miles.
Whiche bredthe continueth through the moste parte of the lande, sauynge that by lytle and lytle it commeth in and ^a politike.

70

SERMONIS QVEM

RAPHAEL HYTHLODAEVVS DE OPTI
MO REIP. STATV HABVIT, LI
BER SECVNDVS, PER THO
MAM MORVM CIVEM
ET VICECOMITEM LONDINENSEM¹.

*

VTOPIENSIVM INSVLA in media sui parte (nam hac latissima est) millia passuum ducenta porrigitur, magnumque per insulae spatium non multo angustior, fines uersus paulatim utrinque

¹ A. and B. have the shorter title: Reip. statu, per Thomam Morum.
Raphaelis Hythlodæi sermo de optimo Liber secundus.

waxeth narrower towardes both the endes. Whiche fetchynge about a circuite or compasse of .v.c.¹ myles, do fassion the hole Ilande lyke to the newe mone². Betwene thys two corners the sea runneth in, diuuydyng them a sonder by the distaunce of .xi. miles or there aboutes, and there surmounteth into a large and wyde sea³, which, by reason that the lande of euery syde compasseth it about, and shiltreth it from the windes, is not rough nor mountith not with great waues, but almost floweth quietlye, not mucche vnlike a great standing powle; and maketh almoste^a al the space within the bellye of the lande in maner of a hauen; and to the great commoditie of the Inhabitauntes receaueth in shyppes towardes euery parte of the lande. The forefrontes or frontiers of the .ii. corners, what wythe fordys and shelues, and what with rockes, be very ieoperdous and daungerous⁵. In the middel distaunce betwene

^a welnighe.

tenuatur. hi uelut circunducti circino quingentorum ambitu millium, insulam totam in lunae speciem renascentis effigiant⁴. Cuius cornua fretum interfluens millibus passuum plus minus undecim dirimit, ac per ingens inane diffusum, circumiectu undique terrae prohibitis uentis, uasti in morem lacus, stagnans magis quam saeuens, omnem prope eius terrae aluum pro portu facit, magnoque hominum usu naues quaqua uersus transmittit. fauces | hinc uadis inde saxis formidosae. 71

Situs et forma
Vtopiae nouae
insulae.

¹ That is, five hundred.

² The editions of 1516 and 1518 illustrate this description by a woodcut, giving a bird's-eye view of the island, which was reproduced, in smaller size, in the Lucubrations of 1563. See the Introduction, § 5.

³ The island is conceived of as something in the shape of a horse-shoe, the two ends of it only eleven miles apart. Between these extremities, as between two projecting moles of a harbour, the sea flows in, expanding on the concave side of the crescent into a vast, sheltered bay.

⁴ The verb effigiare is found in Prudentius. See also the Cornucopiae (ed. 1513), col. 754.

⁵ As a fair specimen of the difference in style between the older translation and Burnet's, and also as helping to make the description clearer, the opening section in Burnet's rendering may be given here:— 'The Island of Utopia is in the Middle two hundred Miles broad, and holds almost at the same Breadth over a great Part of it; but it grows narrower towards both Ends. Its Figure is not unlike a Crescent: Between its Horns them both standeth vp above the water a great rocke, which therefore is nothing perillous bicause it is in sight. Vpon the top of this rocke is a faire and a strong towre builded, which thei holde with a garison of men. Other rockes ther be, that lye^a hidde vnder the water, and^b therefore be daungerous. The channelles be knowen onely to themselves. An¹ therefore it seldome chaunceth that any straunger, oneles he be guided by a Vtopian, can come in to this hauē. In so muche that they themselves could skasellie entre without ieopardie, but that their way is directed and ruled by certaine lande markes standing on the shore. By turning, translatynge², and remouinge this markes into other places, they maye destroye their enemies nauies, be thei neuer so many³. The out side of^c the lande is also full of hauens; but the landing is so surely

^a lyinge.

^b which.

^c or vtter circuite of.

In medio ferme interstitio una rupes eminent, eoque innoxia, cui inaedificatam turrim praesidio tenent: caeterae latentes et insidiosae. Canales solis ipsis noti; atque ideo non temere accidit ut exterus quisquam hunc in sinum, nisi Vtopiano duce, penetret; ut in quem uix ipsis tutus ingressus est, nisi signis quibusdam e litore uiam regentibus. His in diuersa translatis loca, hostium quamlibet numerosam classem facile in perniciem traherent. Ab altera parte non infrequentes portus. At ubique^a tutus unico praesidio defenditur.

Locus natura

Stratagema ex
mutatis signis.

^a nusquam . . . non, A.

the Sea comes in eleven Miles broad, and spreads itself into a great Bay, which is environed with Land to the Compass of about five Hundred Miles, and is well secured from Winds: In this Bay there is no great Current; the whole Coast is, as it were, one continued Harbour, which gives all that live in the Island great Conuenience for mutual Commerce: But the Entry into the Bay, occasioned by Rocks on the one hand, and Shallows on the other, is very dangerous.'

¹ Still used provincially for 'and.'

² That is, transferring, or changing. The word is still used in its literal sense of changes in episcopal sees. The reader will be inclined to apostrophize the one poor Latin term, translatis, in the words of Quince to Bottom, as he marks how Robynson struggles with it.

³ On this and other repellent features of the Utopian character, as drawn by More, see the Introduction, § 4, p. xlvi.

defenced^a, what by nature and what by workmanshynp of mans hande, that a fewe defenders maye dryue backe many armies.

Howbeit, as they saye, and as the fassion of the place it selfe doth partely shewe, it was not euer compassed about with the sea. But kyng Vtopus, whose name as conquerour the Iland beereth (for before that^b tyme it was called Abraxa¹), which also brought the rude and wild people to that excellent perfection, in al good fassions, humanitie, and ciuile gentilnes, wherin they now go beyond al the people of the world; euen at his first arriuinge and enteringe vpon the lande, furth with obteynynge the victory caused .xv. myles space of vplandyshe grounde, where the sea had no passage, to be cut and dygged vp; and so brought the sea rounde aboute the lande. He set to thys worke not only the inhabitauntes of the Ilande (because they should not thynke it done in contumelye and descensus in terram ita natura munitus, aut arte, ut^a ingentes copiae paucis inde queant propugnatoribus arceri.

^a fenced.^b his.

Caeterum, uti fertur, utique ipsa loci facies prae se fert, ea tellus olim non ambiebatur mari. Sed Vtopus, cuius utpote uictoris nomen refert insula (nam ante id tempus Abraxa dicebatur) quique rudem atque agrestem turbam ad id, quo nunc caeteros prope mortales antecellit, cultus humanitatisque perduxit, primo protinus appulsu uictoria potitus, passuum milia quindecim, qua parte tellus continenti adhaesit, excindendum curauit, ac mare circum terram duxit. Quumque ad id operis non incolas modo coegisset (ne contumeliae loco laborem ducerent)

Vtopia insula ab
Vtopo duce.

Hoc plus erat quam
Isthmum perfodere.

Facile fertur quod
omnibus commune est.^b

^a quin, A.^b sit, A.

¹ It is not easy to say whether More had any special idea in his mind, when he devised this name. He may have intended to express the notion of roughness or ruggedness, as Strabo did by his derivation of the river-name

Araxes. Or possibly, as he calls the name of the river of Amaurote 'Waterless' (Anydrus), he may have meant something of the same kind by Abraxa, as if ἄβρεκτος, 'not rained upon.'

despyte), but also all hys owne soldiours. Thus the worke, beyng diuuyded into so great a nombre of worke-men, was with exceding maruelous spede dyspatched. In so muche that the borderers, whiche at the fyrst began to mocke and to gieste at thys vayne enterpryse, then turned theyr laughter to marueyle at the successe, and to feare.

There be in the Ilande .liiii.¹ large and faire cities or shiere townes, agreyng all together in one tonge, in lyke maners, institucions, and lawes. They be all set and situate a lyke, and in all poyntes fashioned a lyke, as farfurth as the place or plotte suffereth. Of thies cyties they that be nighest together be xxiiii. myles a sonder. Again there is none of them distaunt from the next aboute one dayes iorneye a fote.

There cum yearly to Amaurote out of euery cytie .iii. olde men, wyse and well experienced, there to entreate and sed suos praeterea milites omnes adiungeret, in tantam hominum multitudinem opere distributo, incredibili celeritate res perfecta; finitimosque * (qui initio uanitatem incoepti riserant) admiratione successus ac terrore perculerit.

70 [72] Insula ciuitates habet | quatuor et quinquaginta, Oppida Vtopiae insulae.
spatiosas omnes ac magnificas, lingua, moribus, Similitudo concordiam facit.
institutis, legibus prorsus iisdem. idem situs omnium, eadem ubique quatenus per locum licet rerum facies. Urbium inter se mediocre interuallum.
Harum quae proximae inter sunt ^b, millia quatuor ac uiginti separant. Nulla rursus est tam deserta, e qua non ad aliam urbem pedibus queat unius itinere diei perueniri.

Ciues quaque ex urbe terni senes ac rerum periti tractatum de * que om. A. Legend. ut finitimos.

^b inter se sunt, A.

¹ In England and Wales together we now reckon fifty-two shires; but in Harrison's England (ed. by Furnivall, 1877), pp. 96, 97, the number is given as fifty-three. Monmouthshire is there classed as a Welsh county, making thirteen; and the county of Richemond, in place of it, keeps up the English number to forty. As undersheriff of London, More may have been often reminded that the City was a county in itself; and thus, perhaps, his number of fifty-four was made up.

debate of the common matters of the lande. For thys cytie (because it standeth iust in the myddes of the Ilande, and is therfore moste mete for the embassadours of all partes of the realme) is taken for the chiefe and head cytie. The precinctes and boundes of the shieres be so commodiously appoynted out, and set furth for the cyties, that neuer a one ^a of them all hath of anye syde lesse then xx. myles of grounde, and of som syde also muche more ¹, as of that part where the cyties be of farther distaunce a sonder. None of the cities desire to enlarge the boundes and lymites of their shieres ². For they count them selves rather the good husbandes, then the owners of their landes.

They haue in the countrey in all partes of the shiere howses or fermes buylded, wel appointed and furnyshed with all sortes of instrumentes and tooles belongyng to husbandrie. Thies houses be inhabited of the cytezens, whiche cum thyther to dwel by course. No howsholde rebus insulae communibus quotannis conueniunt Amaurotum. Nam ea urbs (quod tanquam in umbilico terrae sita maxime iacet omnium Distributio agrorum. partium legatis opportuna) prima princepsque habetur. Agri ita commode ciuitatibus assignati sunt, ut ab nulla parte minus soli quam $\bar{x}\bar{x}$ ^a passuum millia una quaeuis habeat, ab aliqua multo etiam amplius; uidelicet qua parte

^a that none.

At hinc hodie pestis rerum prope omnium. longius urbes inter se disiunguntur. Nulli urbi cupido promouendorum finium. Quippe quos habent, agricolos magis eorum se, quam dominos, putant.

Prima cura agricolationis. Habent ruri per omnes agros commode dispositas domos, rusticis instrumentis instructas. Hae habitantur ciuibus per uices eo commigrantibus. Nulla familia rus-

^a $\bar{x}\bar{i}\bar{i}$, A.

¹ But yet, as said before, so as not to exceed a day's journey on foot.

² The marginal note in the Latin calls attention to this love of territorial aggrandizement as one of the great plagues of the time. See above, p. 81, for examples.

or ferme in the countrey hath fewer then .xl.¹ persones, men and women, besydes two bonden men, whiche be all vnder the rule and order of the good man and the good wyfe of the house, beyng bothe very sage and discrete^a persones. And euery .xxx. fermes or famelies haue one heade ruler, whiche is called a Phylarche², being as it were a hed baylyffe. Out of euery one of thies famelies or fermes cummeth euery yeare into the cytie .xx. persones whiche haue contynewed .ii. yeres before in the countrey. In their place so manye freshe be sent thither out of the citie³, whiche of them that haue bene there a yeare all ready, and be therfore expert and conninge in husbandry, shalbe instructed and taught; and they the next yeare shall teache other. This order is vsed, for feare that other skarsenes of victualles or some other like incommoditie shuld chaunce through lacke of knowledge, yf they should be al together newe and fresh and vn-experte in husbandrie. This maner and fassion of yearlye chaunginge and renewinge the occupiers of husbandrie,

^a discrete and aunciente.

tica in uiris mulieribusque pauciores habet quam quadraginta, praeter duos asscriptitios seruos, quibus pater materque familias graues ac maturi praeficiuntur; et singulis tricenis familiis philarchus unus. E quaque familia uiginti quotannis in urbem remigrant, hi qui bien-
 73 subrogantur, ut ab his qui annum | ibi fuere, atque ideo rusticarum peritiores rerum, instituantur; alios anno sequente docturi: ne, si pariter omnes ibi noui agricolationisque⁴ rudes essent, aliquid in annona per imperitiam peccaretur. Is innouandorum agricolarum mos etsi solemnissit, ne quisquam inuitus asperiozem uitam cogatur

¹ In Dibdin's edition (Boston reprint, 1878, p. 234) this is for some reason given as 'fifty persons.'

² See the note below, p. 124. The description of this officer as a sort of head bailiff, is inserted by Robynson from what More says a little later on.

³ The benefit of such an alternation of town and country life, where attainable, is obvious. See W. Morris's News from Nowhere, 1890, p. 19.

⁴ The word agricolatio is found in Columella.

though it be solempne and customablie vsed, to thintent that no man shall be constraigned against his wil to conytnewe longe in that harde and sharpe¹ kynde of lyfe, yet manye of them haue suche a pleasure and delete in husbandrye, that they obteyne a longer space of yeares. Thies husbandmen plowe and till the grounde, and bryde² vp cattell, and make^a readye woode, whiche they carrye to the cytie, other by lande or by water, as they maye moste conueniently. They brynge vp a greate multytude of pulleyne, and that by a meruelous policie. For the hennes doo not syt vpon the egges: but by keypyng them in a certayne equall heate, they brynge lyfe into them, and hache them³. The chykens, assone as they be come owte of the shell, followe men and women in steade of the hennes.

^a prouide and make.

continuare diutius; multi tamen, quos rusticae rei studium natura delectat, plures sibi annos impetrant. Agricolaerum colunt, nutriunt animalia, ligna comparant, atque in urbem qua commodum est terra marie conuehunt. Pullorum infinitam educant multitudinem, mirabili artificio. Neque enim incubant oua gallinae; sed magnum eorum numerum calore quodam aequabili fouentes animant educantque. Hi simul atque e testa prodire, homines uice matrum comitantur et agnoscunt.

Agricultorum officia.

Mira ratio fouendi oua.

¹ Lit. 'the rougher life'—of the husbandman.

² That is, breed.

³ The now familiar process of artificial incubation is alluded to by Bacon as something which rested only on hearsay. 'Eggs, as is reported by some, have been hatched in the warmth of an oven.' Nat. Hist. Cent. ix. § 856. But Pliny had referred to it long before as practised in Egypt. Hist. Nat. x. 54. There is a curious passage relating to the same subject in The Voiage and Travaile of Sir John Maundeville, ed. 1883, p. 49, where, speaking of Cairo, he says: 'There is a comoun

Hows in that Cytee, that is fulle of smale Furneys; and thidre bryngen Wommen of the Toun here Eyren of Hennes, of Gees and of Dokes, for to ben put in to tho Furneyeses. And thei that kepen that House coveren hem with Hete of Hors Dong, with outen Henne, Goos or Doke or any other Fowl; and at the ende of 3 Wekes or of a Monethe, thei comen ayen and taken here chickens and norissche hem and bryngen hem forthe.' Even Sir John, however, does not cite the additional marvel with which More concludes his description.

They bryng vp very fewe horses; nor non, but very fearece ones¹; and for none other vse or purpose, but only to exercyse their youthe in rydyng and feates of armes². For oxen be put to all the labour of plowynge and drawyng. Whiche they graunte to be not so good as horses as^a sodeyne brunt, and (as we saye) at a dead lifte³; but yet they holde opinion, that oxen wyll abyde and suffre much more labour and payne^b then horses wyl. And they thinke that they^c be not in daunger and subiecte vnto so manye dysseases, and that they bee kepte and maynteyned wyth mucche lesse coste and charge; and fynally that they be good for meate when they be past labour.

They sowe corne only for bread. For their drynke is other wyne made of grapes, or els of apples or pears⁴,

^a at a.

^b payne and hardnes.

^c oxen.

Equos alunt perquam paucos, nec nisi ferocientes⁵, neque alium in usum quam exercendae rebus equestribus iuuentuti.

Nam omnem seu colendi sed uehendi laborem boues obeunt; quos, ut fatentur equis impetu cedere, sic patientia uincere, nec tot obnoxios morbis putant; ad

haec minore impendio et operae et sumptus ali, ac denique laboribus emeritos in cibum tandem usui esse.

Vsus eorum.

Vsus bouum.

Semente in solum panem utuntur. Nam aut uuarum uinum bibunt, aut pomorum pirorumue, aut denique

Cibus ac potus.

¹ Burnet's rendering, 'full of mettle,' is better.

² The thought may have been suggested by a passage in the Republic, Bk. V. § 467 (tr. by Davies and Vaughan): 'We must put them [the children] on horseback at the earliest possible age; and when we have taught them to ride, we must take them to see the fighting, mounted, not on spirited animals, or good chargers, but on horses selected for speed and docility.'

³ 'Sodeyne brunt' and 'dead lifte' (that is, a lift or pull when there is no way or momentum on the load to make it easier) represent the single word impetus in the Latin.

⁴ Burnet, more concisely: 'Wine, Cyder, or Perry.'

⁵ A word found in some MSS. of Quintilian, Instit. x. 3. 10, instead of efferentes se, as an epithet of equos. The Cornucopiae gives it.

or els it is cleane water; and many tymes methe made of honey or liqueresse sodde in water¹, for therof they haue great store. And though they knowe certeynlye (for they knowe it perfetly in dede), how much victayles the cytie with the hole countrey or shiere rounde a bouthe it dothe spende; yet they sowe much more corne, and bryed vp muche more cattell, then serueth for their own vse. And the ouerplus they parte^a amonge their borderers. What soeuer necessary thynges be lackynge in the countrey, all suche stuffe they fetch out of the citie; where without anye exchange they easelye obteyne it of the magistrates of the citie. For euerye moneth manye of them goo into the cytie on the hollye daye. When theyr haruest daye draweth nere and is at hande, then the Philarches², whiche

^a partynge the overplus.

aquam nonnunquam meram; saepe etiam qua mel aut glycyrizam incoxerint, cuius haud exigua habent copiam. Quum exploratum habeant (habent | enim certissimum) quantum annonae consumat 74

Modus sementis.

urbs, et circumiectus urbi conuentus, tamen multo amplius et sementis faciunt et pecudum educant, quam quod in suos usus sufficiat, reliquum impartituri finitimis. Quibuscunque rebus opus est, quae res ruri non habentur, eam supellectilem omnem ab urbe petunt, et sine ulla rerum commutatione a magistratibus urbanis nullo negotio consequuntur. Nam illo singulo³ quoque

¹ The drink here described as made by an infusion of honey or liquorice, may have been a kind of mead, as Robynson takes it. Harrison, in his Description of England, Bk. II. (ed. 1877, p. 161), speaks slightly of a beverage known by this name, made by the Essex goodwives 'with honi-combs and water,' but not to be compared with the true metheglin, with which mead is sometimes identified. The word appears, however, to have been sometimes used in a more general sense, as by Milton, when he represents Eve as preparing to entertain the angel guest:—

'for drink the grape

She crushes, inoffensive must, and meaths

From many a berry, and from sweet kernels press'd

She tempers dulcet creams.'

² The change of spelling (see above, p. 121) is only capricious, and not meant to indicate a derivation from φίλαρχοι instead of φύλαρχοι. For the officers themselves, see below, p. 135.

³ The singular is found in Plautus, Cist. iv. 2. 36.

be the hed officers and bayliffes of husbandrye, sende woorde to the magistrates of the citie, what numbere of haruest men is nedefull to bee sente to them out of the cytie. The whiche companye of haruest men, beyng there^a readye at the daye appoynted, almoste in one fayre daye dispatcheth all the haruest woorke.

(. . .)

^a there omitted.

mense plerique ad festum diem conueniunt. Quum frumentandi dies instat, magistratibus urbanis agricolarum phylarchi denunciant, quantum ciuium numerum ad se mitti conueniat; quae multitudo frumentatorum, quum ad ipsum diem opportune adsit, uno prope sereno die tota frumentatione defunguntur.

Mutua opera quantum ualeat.

Of the cy=

ties and namely of Amaurote.

AS for their Cyties, he that^a knoweth one of them knoweth them all: they be all so lyke one to an other, as ferfurth as the nature of the place permytteth. I wyll descrybe therfore to yowe one or other of them, for it skylleth not greatly whych; but which rather then Amaurote¹? Of them all this is the worthiest and of moste dignitie. For the resydwe knowledge it for the head cytie, because there is the councell house. Nor to me any of them al is better beloued, as wherin I lyued fyue hole yeares together.

^a who so.

DE VRBIBVS, AC NOMINA

TIM DE AMAVROTO.

VRBium qui unam norit, omnes nouerit: ita sunt inter se (quatenus loci natura non obstat) omnino similes. Depingam igitur unam quampiam (neque enim admodum refert quam)².

Amauroti primariæ Vtopiensium urbis descriptio.

Sed quam potius quam Amaurotum? qua nec ulla dignior est, quippe cui senatus gratia reliquæ deferunt³, nec ulla mihi notior, ut in qua annos quinque perpetuo uixerim.

¹ The name is evidently derived from ἀμαυρός, 'dim,' whence ἀμαύρωσις, 'obscurat,' &c. Baumstark, in his Thomas Morus, 1879, p. 90, oddly interprets the word by 'mauerlos,' 'without walls,' though he adds just after that 'die Stadt ist mit Thürmen, Bollwerken und Mauern befestigt.' A passage in Mr. John Watney's Account of the Hospital of St. Thomas of Acons, 1892, p. 115, shows that

London in More's time, as now, was subject to fogs; and possibly there may have been some thought of this in the author's mind, as his Amaurotum is evidently drawn with reminiscences of London. But most likely the name was only meant to convey the same impression of vagueness or non-existence as Utopia itself.

² An anglicism.

³ Deferre in the sense of 'defer to,' is

The cytie of Amaurote standeth vpon the syde of a low hill, in fashion almoste four square. For the bredeth of it begynneth a litle benethe the toppe of the hyll, and styll contyneweth by the space of twoo miles vntyll it cum to the ryuer of Anyder. The lenghte of it whiche lyeth by the ryuers syde is sumwhat more.

The ryuere of Anyder¹ rysethe .xxiii. myles aboue Amaurote owte of a lytle sprynge. But beyng increasede by other small floodes^a and broukes that runne into yt, and amonge othere .ii. sumwhat bygge ons, before the cytye yt ys halfe a myle brode, and farther broder. And .lx.^b myles beyonde the cytye yt falleth into the Ocean sea. By al that space that lyethe betwene the sea and the cytye, and a good sorte of^c myles also aboue the cytye, the water ebbethe and flowethe .vi. houres together wyth a swyfte tyde. Whan the sea flowethe in for the lenghte of xxx. myles, yt fyllethe all the Anyder wyth salte water,

^a riuers.^b fortie.^c and certen.

Situm est igitur Amaurotum in leni deiectu montis, figura fere quadrata. Nam latitudo eius paulo infra collis incoepa uerticem, 75 milli bus passuum duobus ad flumen Anydrum pertinet, secundum ripam aliquanto longior.

Oritur Anydrus milibus octoginta supra Amaurotum, modico fonte, sed aliorum occursu fluminum, atque in his duorum etiam mediocrium, auctus, ante urbem ipsam quingentos in latum passus extenditur. Mox adhuc amplior, sexaginta milia prolapsus, excipitur oceano. Hoc toto spacio, quod urbem ac mare interiacet, ac supra urbem quoque aliquot milia, sex horas perpetuas influens aestus ac refluus alternat celeri flumine. Quum sese pelagus infert, triginta in longum milia, totum Anydri alueum suis occupat descriptio.

Anydri fluminis

Idem fit apud
Anglos in flumine Thamysi.

late Latin. The construction probably arose from an ellipse of honorem.

¹ Anyder, or rather Anydrus, ἄνυδρος, 'waterless,' is a name in keeping with the rest. The description of it, in some particulars, would accord with that of the Thames; and this resemblance is pointed out in the marginal note which follows. But the measurements would not by any means agree. From London Bridge to the Nore is about 45 miles, not 60; and the length of stream above bridge to its source is about 160 miles, not 24.

and dryuethe backe the fresshe water of the ryuer. And sumwhat further y^t chaungethe the swetenes of the freshe water wyth saltnes. But a letell beyonde that, the ryuer waxeth swet, and runneth forby¹ the city fresh and pleisaunt. And when the sea ebbeth, and goyth backe agayn, the freshe water followeth y^t almoste euen to the verry falle in to the sea.

There goeth a brydge ouer the ryuer made not of pyles or of tymber, but of stonewarke², with gorgious and substanciall archeis at that parte of the cytye that is farthest from the sea; to the intent that shyppes maye goo^a alonge forbie all the syde of the cytie without lette. They haue also an other ryuere, whiche in dede is not very great. But it runneth gentelly and pleasauntlye³.

^a passe.

undis, profligato retrorsum fluuio. Tum aliquanto ultra liquorem eius salsugine corrumpit; dehinc paulatim dulcescens amnis syncerus urbem perlabitur, ac refugientem uicissim purus et incorruptus ad ipsas prope fauces insequitur.

Vrbs aduersae fluminis ripae, non pilis ac sublicibus ligneis sed ex opere lapideo egregie arcuato ponte, commissa est, ab ea parte quae longissime distat a mari, quo naues totum id latus urbis possint inoffensae praeteruehi. Habent alium praeterea fluuium^a, haud magnum quidem illum, sed perquam placidum ac iucundum. Nam ex eodem

Et in hoc Londinum cum Amauroto conuenit.

^a gurgitem, A.

¹ The German vorbei, 'past.'

² According to Maitland, Hist. of London, 1739, p. 34, the old London Bridge, of stone, was begun in 22 Hen. II, and finished to John (1209).

³ A reminiscence to some extent of the Flete river. Our barbarous treatment of rivers and streams is of very old standing, and More's description of this tributary of the Anyder sets forth what the Flete, with the other water-courses mingling with it, ought to have been, but never was. A few years before, however, in 1502, scared perhaps by the plague of 1500, which drove the court to Calais, the citizens had done something. 'At this time,' says Maitland (ubi sup.), 'Fleet Ditch, being choked with mud and dirt, was render'd intirely useless; wherefore it was now effectually cleans'd, and the navigation thereof restored to Holbourn-Bridge, as formerly.'

For it ryseth euen out of the same hyll that the cytie standeth vpon, and runneth downe a slope through the myddes of the citie into Anyder. And bicause it ryseth a lytle without the citie, the Amaurotians haue inclosed the head sprynge of it with stronge fences and bulwarkes, and so haue ioyned it to the cytie. Thys is done to the intente that the water should not be stopped, nor turned a waye, or poysoned, if their enemyes should chaunce to come vpon them¹. From thence the water is deryued and brought^a downe in cannellis of brycke dyuers wayes into the lower partes of the cytie. Where that cannot be done, by reason that the place wyll not suffer it, there they gather the rayne water in greate cisternes², which doth them as good seruice.

The cytie is compassed aboute wyth a highe and thycke walle^b, full of turrets and bulwarkes. A drye dyche, but deape and brode and overgrown with busshes, briers, and thornes³, goeth about .iii. sydes or quarters of the cytie. To the fowrth syde the ryuer it selfe serueth for a dytche.

^a conueied.

^b stone walle.

scaturiens monte, in quo ciuitas collocatur, mediam illam per deuexa perfluens Anydro miscetur. Eius fluuii caput fontem- que, quod paulo extra urbem nascitur, munimentis amplexi Amaurotani iunxerunt oppido, ne si qua uis 76 ho'stium ingruat, intercipi atque auerti aqua, neue corrumpi queat. Inde canalibus coctilibus diuersim ad inferiores urbis partes aqua diriatur. id sicubi locus fieri uetat, cisternis capacibus collecta pluuiam tantundem usus adfert.

Vsus aquae potabilis.

Murus altus ac latus oppidum cingit, turribus ac propugnaculis frequens, arida fossa, sed alta lataque, ac ueprium sepibus impedita, tribus ad lateribus circumdat moenia. quarto flumen ipsam pro fossa est. Plateae cum ad

Moenium munimentum.

¹ Comp. 2 Kings xviii. 17.

² For an example of this on a large scale, see Davis: Carthage and her remains, 1861, p. 393. We have not yet learnt to husband our rain-water.

³ The ditch or moat surrounding the Tower of London may have been in More's mind. This was not, however, drained and planted till 1843.

The stretes be appoynted and set forth verye commodious and handsome, bothe for carriage and also agaynst the wyndes. The houses be of fayre and gorgious buyldyng, and in^a the streete syde they stonde ioyned together in a longe rowe throughe the hole streate without anye partition or separacion¹. The stretes be twenty fote brode². On the backe syde of the houses, through the hole lengthe of the strete, lye large gardeynes, whyche be closed in^b rounde about with the backe parte of the stretes. Euery house hath two doores; one into the strete, and a posternne doore on the backsyde into the gardyne. Thyes doores be made with two leaves, neuer locked nor bolted, so easye to be opened that they wil followe the least drawing of a fynger and shutte agayne by themselves^c. Euerye man that^d wyll maye goo yn, for there is nothyng wythin the howses that ys pryuate, or annye mannes owne³. And euerye .x. yeaere they change their howses by lotte.

^a on.^b [whyche . . . in] inclosed.^c alone.^d [Euery . . . that] Whoso.

uecturam, tum aduersus uentos, descriptae commode. aedificia Plateae cuiusmodi. neutiquam sordida, quorum longa et totum per Aedificia. uicium perpetua series aduersa domorum fronte con-
 Horti aedibus adhaerent^a. spicitur. has uicorum frontes uia distinguit pedes
 Haec sapiunt communitatem uici longitudo, hortus adiacet, latus, et uicorum tergis Platonis. undique circumseptus. Nulla domus est, quae non, ut hostium in plateam, ita posticum in hortum habeat.
 Quin bifores quoque facili tractu manus apertiles, ac dein sua sponte coeuntes, quemuis intromittunt. ita nihil usquam priuati est. Nam domos ipsas uno quoque decennio sorte commutant.

^a adhaerentes.

¹ This is a lax rendering. The sense is: 'a long row of buildings, stretching the whole length of the streets, makes a fine spectacle, as the fronts of the houses face you.'

² See the Introduction, § 2, p. xxx.

³ Community of dwelling-houses was included in the general communism of the Republic. 'No one,' so it was provided, 'should have a dwelling or storehouse, into which all who please may not enter.'—Davies and Vaughan's translation, p. 116.

They sett great stoore be theyr gardeins. In them they haue vyneyardes¹, all manner of frute, herbes, and flowres, so pleisaunte, so well furnished, and so fynelye kepte, that I neuer sawe thyng more frutefull nor better trymmed in anny place. Their studye and delygence herin cummeth not only of pleasure, but also of a certeyne stryffe and contentyon that is betwene strete and strete, concernyng the trymmyng, husbanding, and furnyshyng of their gardeyns, euery man for hys owne part. And verily yow shall not lyghtly fynde in all the citey annye thyng that is more commodious, other for the proffyte of the citizins, or for pleasure. And therefore it may seme that the first fownder of the city mynded nothyng so muche as he dyd^a thies gardeyns.

For they say that kyng Vtopus himself, euen at the first begynning, appointed and drew furth the platte fourme of ^a he dyd omitted.

Hos hortos magnificiunt. in his uineas, fructus, herbas, flores, habent, tanto nitore cultuque, ut nihil fructuosius usquam uiderim, nihil elegantius. qua in re studium horum non ipsa uoluptas modo, sed uicorum quoque inuicem de suo cuiusque horti cultu certamen accendit. et certe non aliud quicquam temere urbe tota reperias, sine ad usum ciuium, siue ad uoluptatem com|modius. eoque nullius rei, quam huiusmodi hortorum, maiorem habuisse curam uidetur is qui condidit. Nam totam hanc urbis figuram, iam inde ab initio descriptam ab

Vtilitas hortorum
etiam Maroni
praedicata².

¹ The London of More's time was not without its vineyards, unlikely as that may now seem. Vine Street, Saffron Hill, took its name from the adjacent vineyard of Ely Place. There was another at Westminster, near St. John's Church. Vinegar-yard, Drury Lane, is the Vinegarth yard. An extensive vineyard, where wine was made and sold, existed near what is now Addison Road Station, till the latter end of last century. See Faulkner's Hammersmith, p. 42.

² The reference is to Virg. Georg. iv. 118:—

Forsitan et pingues hortos quae cura colendi

Ornaret, canerem, &c.

This part of his subject, which Virgil left unfinished, was followed out by Columella, and after him by René Rapin.

the city into this fasion and figure that it hath nowe; but the gallaunt garnishing, and the bewtiful setting furth of it, wherunto he sawe that one mans age wold not suffice, that he left to his posterity. For their Cronicles, which they kepe written with al deligent circumspection, conteining the history of m.viic.lx.¹ years, euen from the fyrste conquest of the Iland, recorde and wisse that the howses in the beginning were verye lowe, and lyke homelye cotages, or poore shepparde howses, made at all aduentures of euerye rude pyece of woode^a that came fyrste to handes, wyth mudde walles, and rydged roofes thatched ouer with straw². But nowe the houses be curiously builded, after a gorgiouse and gallaunt sort, with .iii. storries one ouer another³. The owte sydes of the ipso Vtopo ferunt. Sed ornatum, caeterumque ^a cultum, quibus unius aetatem hominis haud suffecturam uidit, posteris adiiciendum reliquit. Itaque scriptum in annalibus habent, quos ab capta usque insula mille septingentorum ac sexaginta annorum complectentes historiam diligenter et religiose perscriptos adseruant, aedes initio humiles, ac veluti casas et tuguria fuisse, e^b quolibet ligno temere factas, parietes luto obductos, culmina in aciem fastigiata stramentis operuerant. At nunc omnis domus uisenda forma tabulatorum trium.

^a tyMBER.

^a ornatum caeterumque om. A.

^b om. A.

¹ That is, 1760.

² Even as late as Evelyn's time, this description would apply to many parts of England. Salisbury he describes, in 1653, as a city which at small cost 'might be purg'd and render'd infinitely agreeable, and made one of the sweetest townes; but now the common buildings are despicable and the streets dirty.' Uppingham about the same time is remarkable for being 'well builte of stone, which is a rarity in that part of England, where most of the rural parishes are but of mud.'—Diary, ed. 1890, pp. 233, 235.

³ According to Martin (Mediaeval Houses and Castles in England, 1862, p. 9) the addition of even a second storey was of comparatively recent introduction. 'Late in the fifteenth and at the beginning of the sixteenth century the houses of the preceding period were almost universally altered. The hall was divided into two stories. Being no longer required for the entertainment of a feudal retinue, a smaller height was sufficient; and the altered customs of the time rendered additional bed-room accommodation necessary. Both purposes were answered

walles be made other of harde Flynte or of plauster, or elles of brycke ; and the ynner sydes be well strengthened with tymber woorke¹. The roofes be playne and flatte, couered with a certayne kinde of plaster, that is of no coste, and yet so tempered that no fyre can hurte or peryshe it, and withstandeth the violence of the weether better then anye leade. They kepe the wynde out of their windowes with glasse², for it is there much vsed ; and sumwhere also with fyne lynnyn clothe dipped in oyle or parietum facies, aut silice, aut cementis aut latere coctili constructac, in aluum^a introrsus congesto rudere. Tecta in planum subducta, quae intritis^b quibusdam insternunt, nullius impendii, sed ea temperatura quae nec igni obnoxia sit, et tolerandis tempestatum iniuriis plumbum superet. Ventos e fenestris uitro (nam eius ibi creberrimus usus est) expellunt ; interim³ etiam lino tenui, quod perlucido oleo aut succino perlinunt,

Vitreae aut
linteatae fenest rae.

^a Loco verborum aut caementis . . . aluum exhibet A. aut lapide duro aut denique coctile [sic] constructae in alueum. Inserit B. denique ante coctili.

^b sementis (i. q. caementis), A.

by inserting a floor at the level of the bed-room. From this to the so-called Elizabethan house the transition was almost imperceptible.

¹ It is interesting to compare with this what Harrison wrote in 1577, in his Description of England, Bk. II. c. 10 (pp. 233 sqq. in Dr. Furnivall's reprint, 1877). The houses then were still mostly of timber. The 'certayne kinde of plaster' spoken of in the text, is called plaster of Paris by Harrison, made of 'fine alabaster burned, whereof in some places we haue great plentie, and that verie profitable against the rage of fire.' A kind of stucco is also described in Erasmus's Dialogue, Convivium Religiosum.

² Eden (State of the Poor, i. p. 77) infers from Harrison's description, in the chapter just referred to, that glass windows were not introduced into farm-houses much before the reign of James I. They are mentioned in a lease dated 1614. In the houses of richer people they were probably introduced in the reign of Henry VIII. 'Of old time,' says Harrison, 'our countrie houses, in steed of glasse, did vse much lattise, and that made either of wicker or fine rifts of oke in chekerwise.' It is not clear what period Harrison meant by 'of old time,' but he mentions a specimen of glazing with beryl as still extant at Sudley castle. As for the use of 'panels of horne,' he says that they are now 'quite laid downe in euerie place,' and lattices less used, glass being so plentiful. Description of England, as before, pp. 236, 23.

³ Interim, in the sense of interdum, is found in Seneca and Quintilian.

ambre ; and that for twoo commodities. For by thys meanes more lyght cummeth in, and the wynde is better kept out.

gemino nimirum commodo. Si quidem ad eum modum fit, ut et plus lucis transmittat, et uentorum minus admittat.

Of the Magistrates.

Euerye thyrty families or fermes chewse them yearlye an offycer, whyche in their olde language is called the Syphograunte¹, and by a newer name the Phylarche. Euerye tenne Syphoagrauntes, with all their 300^a families, bee vnder an offycer whyche was ones called the Tranibore², now the chiefe Phylarche.

Moreouer, as concerninge the electyon of the Prynce,

^a thirtie.

78

DE MAGISTRATIBVS.

Triginta quaeque familiae magistratum sibi quotannis eligunt, quem sua prisca lingua Syphograntum uocant, recentiore phylarchum. Syphograntis decem cum suis familiis Traniborus olim, nunc protophylarchus dictus, praeficitur.

Traniborus Vtopiensium lingua sonat praefectum primarium.

Syphogranti omnes, qui sunt ducenti, iurati lecturos sese quem

¹ As the old language of the Utopians is here contrasted with the new, in which the names of the magistrates are of Greek formation, it might be natural to suppose that such words as Syphogranti and Tranibori were meant to be simply unintelligible jargon, like the specimen of Utopian speech given above (p. xciv). But as More tells us later on, that the Utopian language, though in other respects not unlike the Persian, 'keepeth dyuers signes and tokens of the Greke langage in the names of their cities and of their magistrates' (p. 214), we are encouraged to look for a Greek origin in the words now before us. And it must be admitted that while one of them has a suspicious resemblance to θρανιβόροι 'bench-eaters,' the first part, at any rate, of the other recalls σῦφος 'a sty.' Can More have been thinking of the Benchers and Steward (Sty-ward) of his old Inn? It may seem an idle guessing of riddles. But it is certain that in his account of the public meals of the Utopians there are reminiscences of his old life at an Inn of Court. See below, p. 164, where the dining together in 'messes' of four is described.

² See the preceding note.

all the Syphoagrautes, which be in number 200, first be sworne to chewse him whome they thynke moste mete and expedyente. Then by a secrete electyon they name prynce¹ one of those .iiii. whome the people before named vnto them. For owte of the .iiii. quarters of the citie there be .iiii. chosen, owte of euerye quarter one, to stande for the election, whiche be put vp to the counsell. The princes office contineweth all his liffe time, onles he be deposed or put downe for suspition of tirannye. They chewse the tranibores yearlye, but lightlye they change them not. All the other offices be but for one yeare. The Tranibores euerye thyrde daye, and sumtymes, if neade be, oftener, come into the counsell howse with the prynce. Their counsell is concernynge the common wealth. Yf there be anyne controuersyes amonge the commoners, whyche be very fewe, they dyspatche and ende them by and by². They take euer ii. Siphograntes to them in cowncell, and euerye daye a newe coupel. And that ys prouydede that no thynge towchyng the common wealthe shalbe con-maxime censent utilem, suffragiis occultis renunciant principem, unum uidelicet ex his quatuor, quos eis populus nominauit. Nam a quaque urbis quarta parte selectus unus commendatur senatui. Principis magistratus perpetuus est in omnem illius uitam, nisi tyrannidis affectatae suspicio impediatur. Traniboros quotannis eligunt. Caeterum haud temere commutant. Reliqui magistratus omnes annui. Tranibori tertio quoque die, interdum, si res postulat, saepius, in consilium cum principe ueniunt. De republica consultant, controuersias priuatorum (si quae sunt) quae perquam paucae sunt, mature dirimunt. Syphograntos semper in senatum duos adsciscunt, atque omni die diuersos: cautumque ut ne quid ratum sit quod ad rempu-

¹ It is evident from the description that this 'prince' (princeps) is the chief magistrate of each city only, and not king of the whole island. See the Introduction, above, p. xlv.

² Lat. mature, 'quickly.' This is the old sense of 'by and by,' as in Luke xxi. 9, 'but the end is not by and by,' where the Revised Version has 'immediately.'

fyrmed and ratified, on les yt haue bene reasonede of and debatede iii. dayes in the cowncell, before yt be decreed. It is deathe to haue annye consultatyon for the common wealthe owte of the cownsell, or the place of the common electyon. Thys statute, they saye, was made to thentente, that the prynce and Tranibores myghte not easely conspire together to oppresse the people by tyrannye, and to chaunge the state of the weale publike. Therfore matters of greate weyghte and importaunce be brought to the electyon house of the syphograuntes, whyche open the matter to their families; and afterwarde, when they haue consulted among them selves, they shewe their deuyse to the cowncell. Sumtyme the matter is brought before the cowncell of the hole Ilande.

Furthermore thys custome also the cowncell vseth, to dyspute or reason of no matter the same daye that it ys fyrste proposed or putt furthe, but to dyfferre it to the nexte syttyng of the cownsell. Bycause that no man when he hathe rasshelye there spoken that cummeth fyrste^a to hys tonges ende, shalt then afterwarde rather studye for reasons wherewyth to defende and confyrme^b hys fyrste folyshe sentence, than for the commoditye of blicam pertineat, de quo non tribus in senatu diebus ante agitatum quam decretum sit. Extra senatum aut comitia publica de rebus communibus inire consilia capitale habetur. Haec eo ferunt instituta, ne procliue esset coniuratione principis ac Tranibororum, oppresso per tyrannidem populo, statum reipublicae mutare. Atque ideo quicquid magni momenti iudicatur, ad Syphograntorum comitia defertur, qui cum suis familiis communicata re post inter se consultant, ac suum consilium renun-79 ciant senatui. Interdum ad totius insulae consilium res defertur.

^a fyrste omitted.

^b mainteine.

Nihil subito statuendum.

Quin id quoque moris habet senatus, ut nihil, quo die primum proponitur, eodem disputetur, sed in frequentem senatum differatur; ne quis ubi quod in buccam primum uenerit temere effutierit, ea potius excogitet postea, quibus decreta tueatur sua, quam quae ex reipu-

Vtinam idem hodie fiat in nostris consiliis.

the common wealthe; as one rather wyllynge the harme or hynderaunce of the weale publyque, then annye losse or dymynutyon of hys owne existymatyon; and as one that wolde not for shame (which is a verye folyshe shame) be cowntede^a annye thyng e ouerseen¹ in the matter at the fyrste^b; who at the fyrste owghte to haue spoken rather wysely then hastely or rashelye.

^a wolde be ashamed . . . to be.

^b at the firste ouersene in the matter.

blicae usu sint; malitque salutis publicae quam opinionis de se Hoc sibi uolebat iacturam facere, peruerso quodam ac praepostero uetus prouerbi- pudore, ne initio parum prospexisse uideatur. Cui um, ἐν νουκτὶ prospiciendum initio fuit, ut consulto potius quam βουλή². cito loqueretur.

¹ The Latin means literally 'deficient in foresight.' Halliwell illustrates this use of 'overseen' in the sense of 'deceived' by a passage from Terence in English, 1614: 'where if thou be overseene in anything, be it never so little, I shall utterly perish.'

² Erasmus gives the proverb under the heading 'In nocte consilium' (Adag. ed. 1629, p. 199 b). See also Herod. vii. 12. Erasmus shows the application of the saying to be against rashness or precipitancy; so that this marginal note should rather be attached to the words 'sed infrequentem senatum differatur.'

Of Sciences

Craftes and Occupatjons.

Husbandrye is a science common to them all in generall, both men and women, wherin they be all experte and cunnyng. In thys they be all instructe euen from their youth; partely in scholes with traditions and preceptes, and partely in the contrey nighe the cytye, brought vp¹ as it wer in playing, not onlye beholdyng the vse of it, but by occasyon of exercisinge their bodies practising it also.

Besides husbandry, which (as I sayde) is common to them all, euery one of them learneth one or other seuerall and particuler science, as hys owne proper craft. That is most commonly other clotheworkinge² in wolle or flaxe, or masonrie, or the smythes craft, or the carpentes

DE ARTIFICIIS.

ARs una est omnibus uiris mulieribusque promiscua agricultura, cuius nemo est expers. Hac a pueritia eruduntur omnes, partim in schola traditis praeceptis, partim in agros uiciniores urbi, quasi per ludum, educti; non intuentes modo, sed per exercitandi corporis occasionem tractantes etiam.

Agricultatio communis omnium, quam nunc in paucos contemp-tos rei cimus.

Praeter agriculturam (quae est omnibus, ut dixi, communis) quilibet unam quampiam, tanquam suam, docetur. ea est fere aut lanificium, aut operandi lini studium, aut cemen-tariorum, aut fabri, seu ferrarii seu materiarii, artifi-

Artes ad necessi-tatem, non ad luxum, discendae.

¹ Robynson has confused educti with educati. What More says is, that all are trained in husbandry from childhood; partly by rules taught in school, and partly by being taken out, as in play, into the fields adjoining their city, which would serve as the best kind of object lesson.

² More probably specifies this in the first place, as the manufacture of science. For there is none other occupacyon that anye numbre to speke of doth vse there. For their garmentes, whyche through owte all the Ilande be of one fassion, (sauynge that there is a difference betwene the mans garmente and the womans, betwene the married and the unmarried), and this one continueth for euer more unchanged, semely and comely to the eye, no let to the mouynge and weldynge of the bodie, also fitte bothe for winter and summer: as for thies garmentes (I saye), euery familie maketh their owne¹. But of the other foreseede craftes euerye man learneth one; and not only the men, but also the women. But the women, as the weaker sorte, be put to the easere craftes. They^a worke wull and flaxe. The other^b more laborsome sciences be committed to the men. For the moste parte euerye man is brought vp in ^a as to.^b other omitted.

cium. Neque enim aliud est opificium ullum, quod numerum aliquem dictu dignum occupet illic. Nam uestes, quarum, nisi quod habitu sexus discernitur, et caelibatus a coniugio, una per totam insulam forma est, eademque per omne aeuum perpetua, nec ad oculum indecora, et ea corporis motum | habilis, tum ad frigiditatis aestusque rationem appositae, eas, 80 inquam, quaeque sibi familia conficit. Sed ex aliis illis artibus unus quisque aliquam discit, nec uiri modo, sed mulieres etiam. Caeterum hae, uelut imbecilliores, leuiora tractant. lanam fere linumque operantur. uiris artes reliquae magis laboriosae mandantur. maxima ex parte quisque in Cultus similitudo.

Nemo ciuium
expers artificii.

woollen cloths was so important an industry both in Flanders, where he wrote, and in his native country. Masonry may have been placed next, from the great activity in building shown in England during the fifteenth century. See Denton's England in the Fifteenth Century, 1888, and Professor Thorold Rogers' Introduction to Gascoigne's Loci, 1881, p. xxiv.

¹ 'I knewe the time,' says one of

the interlocutors in The Common Weal of this Realm of England, 1549 (ed. 1893, p. 125), 'when men weare contented with cappes, hattes, girdelles, and poyntes and all maner of garmentes made in the townes next adioyninge . . . Nowe the porest yonge man in a cuntrye can not be contented either with a lether girdle, or lether pointes, gloues, knyues, or daggers made nyghe home.'

his fathers craft. For moste commonly they be naturally therto bente and inclined. But yf a mans minde stonde to anny other, he is by adoption put into a famelye of that occupation which he doth most fantasy. Whome not only his father, but also the magistrates do diligently looke to, that he be putt to a discrete and an honest householder. Yea and if anny person, when he hath lerned one crafte, be desierous to lerne also another, he ys lykewyse suffrede and permytted. When he hathe learned bothe, he occupyethe whether he wyll; onles the cytye haue more neade of the one then of the other.

The chyefe and almoste the onelye offyce of the Syphograuntes ys to see and take hede that no man sytte ydle, but that euerye one applye hys owne crafte wyth earneste delygence; and yet for all that not to be weryed from earlye in the mornynge to late in the euennyng wyth contynuall woorke, lyke laborynge and toolyng beasts. For thys ys worse then the miserable and wretced condytyon of bondemen; whyche neuer the lesse is almoste euery where the lyffe of woorkemen and artyfycers, sauynge in vtopia. For they, dyuydinge the daye and the nyghte into xxiiii. iust houres, appoynte and assygne only patriis artibus educatur, nam eo plerique natura feruntur. Quod si quem animus alio trahat, in eius opificii, cuius capitur studio, familiam quãpiam adoptione traducitur, cura non a patre modo eius, sed magistratibus etiam praestita, ut graui atque honesto patrifamilias mancipetur. Quin si quis unam perdoctus artem aliam praeterea cupiuerit, eodem modo permittitur. Vtramque nactus, utram uelit exercet, nisi alterutra ciuitas magis egeat.

Ad quam quisque natura sit appositus, eam discat artem.

Syphograntorum praecipuum ac prope unicum negocium est, curare ac prospicere ne quisquam desideat ociosus, sed uti suae quisque arti sedulo incumbat, nec ab summo mane tamen, ad multum usque noctem perpetuo labore, uelut iumenta, fatigatus. nam ea plusquam seruilis erumna est; quae tamen ubique fere opificum uita est, exceptis Vtopiensibus; qui cum in horas uiginti quatuor aequales diem connumerata nocte diuidant, Ociosi pellendi e Republica.

Moderandus opificum labor.

vi. of those houres to worke; iii.^a before none, vpon the whyche they goo streyghte to dyner; and after dyner, when they haue rested ii houres, then they worke iii.^b; and vpon that they goo to supper¹. Aboute viii. of the clocke in the euenynge (cowntyng one of the clocke at the fyrste houre after none) they go to bedde. viii. houres they giue to sleape². All the voide time, that is betwene the houres of worke, slepe, and meate, that they be ^a iii. omitted.

^b iii. houres.

sex duntaxat operi deputant; tres ante meridiem, a quibus prandium ineunt; atque a prandio duas pomeridianas horas quum interquieverint, tres deinde rursus labori datas coena claudunt. Quum primam 81 horam ab meridie numerent, sub octauam cubitum eunt. horas octo somnus uendicat. Quicquid inter operis horas ac somni cibique me-

¹ These Utopian hours of labour must have presented a sharp contrast to those actually in use in More's time. By a statute of 11 Hen. VII. (1495-6), cap. 22, it was enacted 'that every artificer and labourer be at his work, between the midst of the month of March and the midst of the month of September, before five of the clock in the morning, and that he have but half an hour for his breakfast, and an hour and a half for his dinner, of such time as he hath season for sleeping, to him appointed by this said statute; and at such time as is here appointed that he shall not sleep, then he to have but one hour for his dinner, and half an hour for his noon-meat; and that he depart not from his work, between the midst of the said months of March and September, till between seven and eight of the clock in the evening . . . and that, from the midst of September to the midst of March, every artificer and labourer be at their work in the springing of the day, and depart not till night of the same day.' See Eden's State of the Poor, 1797, i. p. 75, and Cunningham's Growth of English Industry, 1890, p. 476. In 1514 an act was passed, almost identical in terms with this of 1495; but a special exemption had to be made in it in respect of London, where a higher rate of wages prevailed. The subject, as we may thus see, had been very recently brought under More's notice.

² This would make four o'clock the hour for rising. Cecil, to whom Robynson's translation was dedicated, used to rise at that hour when at St. John's College, Cambridge; a College which had, 'as I have heard grave men of credit report, more candles lighted in it every winter morning before four of the clock, than the four of the clock bell gave strokes,' T. Nash, quoted in Mayor's edition of Ascham's Scholemaster, 1863, p. 277. For More's own custom in this respect, see above, p. 4 n.

suffered to bestowe, euerye man as he lyketh beste hym selfe : not to thyntente they^a shoulde myspende thys tyme in ryote, or sloughfullenes ; but, beyng then lycensed from the laboure of theyr owne occupacyons, to bestowe the time wel and thriftely vpon some other good^b science, as shall please them. For yt ys a solempne custome there, to haue lectures daylye earlye in the morning ; wher to be present they onlye be constreined that be namelye chosen and appoynted to learnynge. Howe be yt a greate multytude of euerye sorte of people, bothe men and women, goo to heare lectures ; some one and some an other, as euerye mans nature is inclnyed. Yet, this notwithstanding, yf any man had rathere bestowe thys tyme vpon hys owne occupatyon (as yt chaunceth in manye, whose myndes ryse not in the contemplatyon of annye scyence lyberal), he is not letted nor prohibited, but is also praysed and commended, as profitable to the common wealthe.

After supper they bestowe one houre in playe ; in somer in their gardeynes, in winter in their commen halles, where they dyne and suppe. There they exercise them selves in musyke, or els in honeste and holsome comunicacion.

^a that they.

^b good omitted.

dium esset, id suo cuiusque arbitrio permittitur ; non quo per luxum aut segnitiam abutatur, sed quod ab opificio liberum ex animi sententia in aliud quippiam studii bene collocet. has intercapedines plerique impendunt literis. Solenne est enim publicas cotidie lectiones haberi antelucanis horis, quibus ut intersint ii dumtaxat adiguntur, qui ad literas nominatim selecti sunt. Caeterum ex omni ordine mares simul ac foeminae, multitudo maxima, Studia literarum. ad audiendas lectiones, alii alias, prout cuiusque fert natura, confluit. Hoc ipsum tempus tamen, si quis arti suae malit insumere, quod multis usu uenit (quorum animus in nullius contemplatione disciplinae consurgit) haud prohibetur : quin laudatur quoque, ut utilis reipublicae.

Super coenam tum unam horam ludendo producant, Lusus in coenis. aestate in hortis, hyeme in aulis illis communibus, in quibus comedunt. Ibi aut musicen exercent, aut se sermone

Diceplaye, and suche other folish and pernicious games, they knowe not¹; but they vse .ii. games not muche vnlike the chesse. The one is the battell of numbers, wherin one nombre stealethe awaye another. The other is wherin vices fyghte wyth vertues², as it were in battell array, or a set fyld. In the which game is verye properlye shewed bothe the striffe and discorde that vices haue amonge themselves, and agayne theire unitye and concorde againste vertues; and also what vices be repugnaunt to what vertues; with what powre and strenght they assaile them openlye; by what wieses and subtelye they assaute them secretlye; with what helpe and aide the vertues resiste, and ouercome the puissaunce of the vices; by what craft recreant. Aleam atque id genus ineptos ac perniciosos ludos ne At nunc alea cognoscunt quidem. caeterum duos habent in usu principum lusus ludos, latrunculorum ludo non dissimiles: alterum, est. numerorum pugnam, in qua numerus numerum prae-Lusus utiles datur: alterum, in quo collata acie cum uirtutibus uitia quoque. confligunt. Quo in ludo perquam scite ostenditur et uitiorum inter se dissidium, et aduersus | uirtutes concordia; item 82

 quae uitia quibus se uirtutibus opponant, quibus uiribus aperte oppugnent, quibus machinamentis ab obliquo adorianur, quo prae-sidio uirtutes uitiorum uires infringant, quibus artibus eorum conatus

¹ More is here almost describing by anticipation the life of his own household at Chelsea. 'It was one of the necessities of his dignity at court that he should have several attendants when he went out. When they were not engaged in this service he would not allow them to remain idle. He divided his garden into portions, to each of which he assigned one of his men as its cultivator. Some learnt to sing, others to play on the organ; but he absolutely forbade games of cards or dice, even to the young gentlemen in his house.'—Bridgett's Life, p. 139.

² 'Playing at Vertues' is the heading of one game for maidens in The French Garden for English Ladies and Gentlewomen, 1621, quoted in Brand's Popular Antiquities. The 'battell of numbers,' at which one 'makes booty of (praedatur) another,' might answer to more than one still-familiar game. Playing at 'odd and even' is mentioned by Plato, Lysis, § 206 E, and commentators on the Republic, § 422 (sub fin.), tell us that there was 'a game called "Cities" played with counters.' See Davies and Vaughan, as before, p. 121 n.

they frustate their purposes ; and finally by what sleight or meanes the one gëtteth the victory.

But here, lease ¹ you be deceaued, one thinge you muste looke more narrowly vpon. For seinge they bestowe but vi. houres in woork ², perchaunce you maye thinke that the lacke of some necessarye thinges herof may ensewe. But this is nothinge so. For that small time is not only inough, but also to muche, for the stoores and abundaunce of all thinges that be requisite, other for the necessitie or commoditie of liffe. The whiche thinge yow also shall perceauē, if you weye and consider with your selves how great a parte of the people in other contreis lyueth ydle. First, almost all women, which be the halfe of the hole numbere ; or els, if the women be annye ^a where occupied, their most comonlye in their steade the men be ydle. Besydes thys, how great, and howe ydle a companie ys they of prystes, and relygyous men, as they call them ³?

^a some.

eludant, quibus denique modis alterutra pars uictoriae compos fiat.

Sed hoc loco, ne quid erretis, quiddam pressius intuendum est. Etenim quod sex dumtaxat horas in opere sunt, fieri fortasse potest ut inopiam aliquam putes necessariarum rerum sequi. Quod tam longe abest ut accidat, ut id temporis ad omnium rerum copiam, quae quidem ad uitae uel necessitatem requirantur uel commoditatem, non sufficiat modo sed supersit etiam : id quod uos quoque intelligetis, si uobiscum reputetis apud alias gentes quam magna populi pars iners degit. primum mulieres fere omnes, totius summae dimidium ; aut, sicubi mulieres negociosae sunt, ibi ut plurimum earum uice uiri stertunt. ad haec, sacerdotum ac religiosorum, quos uocant, quanta quamque ociosa turba.

Ociosorum hominum genera.

¹ Lest.

² This is the estimate of the time necessary for labour formed by many modern socialists. 'If six hours' work per diem,' says Marx, 'would suffice to keep the labourer and his family, and he works ten, who gets the benefit of the other four?'—See Woolsey's

Communism and Socialism, p. 162.

³ Compare what Pole is made to say in the Dialogue (p. 156) about the 'grete nombur and vnprofytabul' of 'relygyouse personys ;' and the passage in Erasmus's De sarienda Ecclesiae concordia beginning 'Dolendum est tam multos esse monachos.'

Put there to all ryche men, speciallye all landed men, whyche comonly be called gentylnen, and noble men. Take into this numbere also their seruauntes; I meane, all that flocke of stout, bragging, russhe bucklers¹. Ioyne to them also sturdy and valiaunt beggers², clokinge their idle leffe³ vnder the colour of some disease or sickenes. And truely yow shall finde them much fewer then yow thought, by whose labour all these thynges be gotten^a, that men vse and lyue bye^b. Nowe consyder wyth youre selfe, of thies fewe that do woorke, how fewe be occupied in necessary woorkes. For where money beareth all ye swing, ther many vayne and superfluous occupations must nedys be vsed, to serue only for ryotous superfluyte and vnhonest pleasure. For the same multytude that now is occupied in woorke, if they were deuided into so fewe occupations as the necessary vse of nature requyreth, in so greate plentye of thinges, as then of necessity wolde

^a are wrought.

^b that in mens affaires are daylye vsed and frequented.

adiice diuites omnes, maxime praediorum dominos, quos uulgo δορυφόρημα
nobilium. generosos appellant, ac nobiles: his adnumera ipso-rum famulitium, totam uidelicet illam cetratorum nebulonum colluuiem: robustos denique ac ualentes mendicos adiunge, morbum quempiam praetexentes inertiae: multo certe pauciores esse quam putas inuenies eos, quorum labore constant haec omnia quibus mortales utuntur. Expende nunc tecum ex his ipsis quam | pauci in necessariis opificiis uersantur; siquidem ε3 ubi omnia pecuniis metimur, multas artes necesse est Prudentissime
dictum. exerceri inanes prorsus ac superfluas, luxus tantum ac libidinis ministras. nam haec ipsa multitudo, quae nunc operatur, si partiretur in tam paucas artes, quam paucas com-modus naturae usus postulat, in tanta rerum abundantia, quanta nunc

¹ The 'swashbucklers' of Shakspere; or, to borrow Scott's description of a Highland laird, the 'dozen young lads besides, that have no business, but are just boys of the belt, to follow the laird, and do his honour's bidding.' Dibdin tries, but wrongly, to show that the word means men with bucklers 'as flimsy as rushes.' See Nares's Glossary, s. v.

² See the Introduction, § 2.

³ That is, life.

ensue, doubtles the prices wolde be to lytle for the artifycers to maynteyne theyre lyuynges. But yf all thyes, that be nowe bisiede about vnprofitable occupations, with all the hole flocke of them that lyue ydellye and slouthfullye, whyche consume and waste euerye one of them more of thies thynges that come by other mens labour, then ii. of the work men themselves doo; yf all thyes (I saye) were sette to profytable occupatyons, yowe easelye perceauē howe lytle tyme wolde be enoughe, yea and to muche, to stoore vs wyth all thynges that maye be requysyte other for necessaryte, or for commodytye; yea, or for pleasure, so that the same pleasure be trewe and naturall.

And thys in Vtopia the thyngē yt selfe maketh manifeste and playne. For there in all the citey, wyth the hole contreye or shyere adioynynge to yt, scaselye 500 persons of all the hole nombre of men and women, that be nother to olde nor to weake to woorke, be licensed from^a labour. Amonge them be the Siphograutes, which (though they be by the lawes exempte and pryuyleged from labour) yet they exempte not themselves; to the intent they^b maye the esse necesse sit, precia nimirum uiliora forent quam ut artifices inde uitam tueri suam possent. At si isti omnes quos nunc inertes artes distringunt, ac tota insuper ocio ac desidia languescens turba, quorum unus quiuis earum rerum quae aliorum laboribus suppeditantur, quantum duo earundem operatores consumit, in opera uniuersi atque eadem utilia collocarentur, facile animaduertis quantum temporis ad suppeditanda omnia, quae uel necessitatis ratio uel commoditatis efflagitet (adde uoluptatis etiam quae quidem uera sit ac naturalis) abunde satis superque foret.

^a and discharged from.

^b that they.

Atque id ipsum in Vtopia res ipsa perspicuum facit. Nam illic in tota urbe cum adiacente uicinia uix homines quingenti^a ex omni uirorum ac mulierum numero, quorum aetas ac robur operi sufficit, uacatio permittitur. In hiis syphogranti (quanquam leges eos labore soluerunt) ipsi tamen sese non eximunt, quo facilius exemplo suo reliquos

Ne magistratus
quidem ab opere cessant.

^a B. recte hominibus quingentis. Al. homines quingenti quibus.

rather by their example prouoke other to woорke. The same vacation from labour do they also enioye, to whome the people, persuaded by the commendation of the priestes and secrete election of the Siphograntes, haue geuen a perpetuall licence from labour to learnyng. But if anny one of them proue nott accordinge to the expectation and hoope of him conceaued, he is furth with plucked backe to the company of artificers. And contrarye wise, often yt chaunceth that a handicraftes man doth so earnestly bestowe hys vacaunte and spare houres in learninge, and through dilygence so profytte therin, that he is taken frome hys handy occupation, and promoted to the company of the learned.

Owt of this ordre of the learned be chosen ambassadours, priestes, Tranibores, and finallye the prince him selfe; whome they in their olde tonge call Barzanes¹, and by a newer name, Adamus². The residewe of the people being nother ydle, nother^a occupied about vnprofitable

^a nor yet.

ad labores inuitent. Eadem immunitate gaudent hi, quos commendatione sacerdotum persuasus populus occultis syphograntorum suffragiis ad perdiscendas disciplinas perpetua uacatione indulget. Quorum si quis conceptam de se spem fefellerit, ad opifices retruditur. contraque non rarenter³ usu uenit, | ut mechanicus quispiam⁸⁴ subcisiuas illas horas tam gnauiter impendat literis, tantum diligentia proficiat, ut opificio suo exemptus in literatorum classem prouehatur.

Ex hoc literatorum ordine legati, sacerdotes, Tranibori, ac ipse Soli literati ad denique deligitur princeps, quem illi prisca ipsorum magistratus lingua Barzanem, recentiore Ademum, appellant. uocantur. Reliqua fere multitudo omnis, quum neque ociosa sit, nec inutilibus opificiis occupata, procliuis aestimatio est quam

¹ It has been before noticed (p. 135), that More describes the Utopian language as being, with the exception of 'diuers signs and tokens of the Greek,' 'in all other points not much unlike the Persian tongue.' See below, p 214. The choice of Barzanes for the name of a chief ruler is in accordance with this.

² As the river of the Amaurotes was Anydrus, 'without water,' so the king, by his later Greek name, was Adēmus, 'without people.' Why Robynson turned the name into Adamus, is not clear. He or his compositor may perhaps have been thinking of Adam.

³ Rarenter is post-classical for raro.

exercises, it may be easely iudged in how fewe howres how much good woorke by them maye be doone^a towardes those thinges that I haue spoken of. This commodity they haue also aboue other, that in the most part of necessary occupations they neade nott so muche worke, as other nations doo. For firste of all the buildinge or repaying of houses asketh euery where so manye mens continuall labour, bicause that the vnthyfty heyre suffreth the howses that hys father buylded, in contynewaunce of tyme to fall in decay. So that which he myghte haue vpholden wyth lytle coste, hys successoure is constreynede to buylde yt agayne a newe, to hys greate chardge. Yea, manye tymes also the howse that stode one man in muche moneye, anothere ys of so nyce and soo delycate a mynde that he settethe nothyng by yt. And yt beyng neglected, and therefore shortelye fallynge into ruyne, he buyldethe vppe anothere in an othere place wyth no lesse coste and chardge. But emonge the Vtopians, where all thynges be sett in a good ordre, and the common wealthe in a good staye, yt very seldome chaunceth, that they chuse a new plotte to buylde an hōuse vpon. And they doo not only finde spedy and quicke remedies for present

^a doone and dispatched.

paucae horae quantum boni operis pariant. ad ea quae commemorauī, hoc praeterea facilitatis accedit, quod in necessariis plerisque artibus minore opera quam aliae gentes opus habent. Nam primum aedificiorum aut structura aut refectio ideo tam multorum assiduam ubique requirit operam, quod quae pater aedificauit, haeres parum frugi paulatim dilabi sinīt: ita, quod minimo tueri potuit, successor eius de integro impendio magno cogitur instaurare. Quin frequenter etiam quae domus alii ingenti sumptu stetit, hanc alius delicato animo contemnit: eaque neglecta atque ideo breui collapsa, aliam alibi impensis non minoribus extruit. At apud Vtopienses, compositis rebus omnibus et constituta republica, rarissime accedit uti noua collocandis aedibus area deligatur; et non modo remedium celeriter fautes, but also preuente them that be like to fall. And by this meanes their houses continewe and laste very longe with litle labour and small reparæions; in so much that that^a kind of woorkemen sumtimes haue almost nothinge to doo; but that they be commaunded to hewe timbre at home, and to square and trime vp stones, to the intente that if annye woorke chaunce, it may the spedelier rise.

Quomodo uidentur impensae in aedificiis.

Now¹, Syre, in theire apparell marke, I praye yow, howe few woorkemen they neade. Fyrste of all, whyles they be at woorke, they be couered homely with leather or skinnes that will last .vii. yeares. When they go furthe a brode, they caste vpon them a cloke, whyche hydeth the other homelye apparell. Thyes clookes thoroughe owte the hole Ilande be all of one coloure, and that is the naturall colour of the wul. They therfor do not only spende mucche lesse wullen clothe then is spente in othere contreys, but also the same standeth them in mucche lesse coste. But linnen clothe ys made wyth lesse labour, and praesentibus uitiiis adhibetur, sed etiam imminentibus occurritur. Ita fit ut minimo labore diutissime perdurent aedificia, et id genus artifices uix habeant interdum quod agant; nisi | quod materiam dolare 85 domi et lapides interim quadrare atque aptare iubentur, quo (si quod opus incidat) maturius possit exurgere.

^a this.

Iam in uestibus uide quam paucis operis egeant: primum, dum in opere sunt, corio neglectim aut pellibus amiciuntur, quomodo in amictu. quae in septennium durent. quum procedunt in publicum, superinducunt chlamydem uestem, quae rudiores illas uestes contegat. eius per totam insulam unus color est, atque is natiuus. Itaque lanei panni non modo multo minus quam^a usquam alibi sufficit, uerum is ipse quoque multo minoris impendii est. at lini minor est labor, eoque usus crebrior. sed in lineo solus candor,

^a sic A. recte pro quae.

¹ Robynson shows, though a little cumbrously, his knowledge of the force given to a sentence by beginning with

Iam. Burnet's 'As to their Cloaths, observe how little Work is spent in them,' though simpler, ignores this.

ys therefore hadde more in vse. But in lynen clothe onlye whytenese, in wullen onlye clenlynes, ys regardedede. As for the smalnese or fynesse of the threde, that ys no thyng passed for. And thys ys the cause wherfore in other places .iiii. or v. clothe gownes of dyuers colours, and as manye sylke cootes, be not enoughe for one man. Yea, and yf he be of the delycate and nyse sorte, x. be to fewe ; where as there one garmente wyll serue a man mooste commenlye .ii. yeares. For whie shoulde he desyre moo ? seing if he had them, he should not be the better hapt¹ or couered from colde, nother in his apparell any whyt the cumlyer.

Wherefore, seyng they be all exercysed in profytable occupatyons, and that fewe artyfycers in the same craftes be suffycyente, thys ys the cause that, plentye of all thynges beyng emonge them, they doo sumtymes bring furthe an innumerable companye of people to amende the hyghe wayes, yf annye be broken. Manye times also, when they haue no such woorke to be occupied about, an open proclamation is made that they shall bestowe fewer houres in woorke. For the magistrates do not exercise in laneo sola mundicies conspicitur: nullum tenuioris fili precium est. Itaque fit ut, quum alibi nusquam uni homini quatuor aut quinque togae laneae diuersis coloribus, ac totidem sericiae tunicae sufficiant, delicatioribus paulo ne decem quidem, ibi una quisque contentus est^a, plerunque in biennium. Quippe nec causa est ulla cur plures affectet; quas consecutus neque aduersus frigus esset munitior, neque uestitu uideretur uel pilo cultior.

Quamobrem quum et omnes utilibus sese artibus exerceant, et ipsarum etiam opera pauciora sufficiant, fit nimirum ut abundante rerum omnium copia, interdum in reficiendas (si quae detritae sunt) uias publicas immensam multitudinem educant; persaepe etiam quum nec talis cuiuspian operis usus occurrat, pauciores horas operandi publice denuntient. neque enim superuacaneo | labore ciues inuitos exercent magistratus, quandoquidem eius reipublicae institutio hunc their citizens againste their willes in vnneadfull laboures. For whie? in the institution of that weale publique this ende is only and chiefly pretended and mynded, that what time maye possibly be spared from the necessary occupations and affayres of the commen wealthe, all that the cytizeins sholde withdrawe from the bodely seruice to the free liberty of the mind and garnisshing of the same. For herin they suppose the felicity of this liffe to consist.

^a om. A. Legend. sit.

² Wrapt. See the Glossary.

unum scopum in primis respicit, ut, quoad per publicas necessitates licet, quamplurimum temporis ab seruitio corporis ad animi libertatem cultumque ciuibus uniuersis asseratur. In eo enim sitam uitae felicitatem putant.

Of their ly=

uing and mutuall conuersation together.

BUt now will I declare how the citizens vse themselves one towardes another ; what familiar occupieng and enterteynement there is emong the people ; and what fasion they vse in distributinge euey thyng. First, the city consisteth of families : the families most commonlie be made of kinredes. For the women, when they be maryed at a lawfull age, they goo into their husbandes houses. But the male chylde, with al the hole male offspring, continewe still in their owne familie, and be gouerned of the eldest and auncientest father, onles he dote for age ; for then the next to hym in age is put^a in his rowme.

But to thintent the prescript numbere of the citezens shoulde nether decrease, nor aboue measure increase, it is ordeined that no famylie, whiche in euerye citie be vi.

^a placed.

DE COMMERCIIIS MVTVIS.

SEd iam quo pacto sese mutuo ciues utantur, quae populi inter se commercia, quaeque sit distribuendarum rerum forma, uidetur explicandum. Quum igitur ex familiis constet ciuitas, familias ut plurimum cognationes efficiunt. Nam foeminae (ubi maturuerint) collocatae maritis in ipsorum domicilia concedunt. at masculi filii ac deinceps nepotes in familia permanent, et parentum antiquissimo parent, nisi prae senecta mente parum ualuerit : tunc enim aetate proximus ei sufficitur.

Verum ne ciuitas aut fieri infrequentior, aut ultra Numerus ciuium. modum possit increscere, cauetur ne ulla familia, quathousand in the hole, besydes them of the contrey, shall at ones haue fewer chyldren of the age of xiiii. yeares or there aboute¹ then x., or mo then xvi.; for of chyldren vnder thys age no numbre can be^a appointed. This measure or numbre is easely obserued and kept, by puttinge them that in fuller families be aboute the numbre into families of smaller increase. But if chaunce be that in the hole citie the stoore encrease aboute the iust numbre, therewith they fyll vp the lacke of other cityes. But if so be that the multitude throughout the hole Ilande passe and excede the dew numbre, then they chewse out of euery citie certeyn cytezens, and buylde vp a towne vnder their owne lawes in the nexte lande² where the inhabitauntes haue

^a be prescribed or.

rum millia sex quaeque ciuitas, excepto conuentu³, complectitur, pauciores quam decem, pluresue quam sexdecim puberes habeat. Impuberum enim nullus praefiniri numerus potest. Hic modus facile seruatur, transcriptis hiis in rariores familias, qui in plenioribus excrescunt. At si quando in totum plus iusto abundauerit, aliarum urbium suarum infrequentiam sarciant. Quod^a si forte per totam | insulam plus aequo moles intumuerit, tum ex qualibet urbe descriptis 87 ciuibus in continente proximo, ubicunque indigenis agri multum superest et cultu uacat, coloniam suis ipsorum legibus propagant,

^a om. A.

¹ This is a diffuse explanation of puberes, by which More no doubt simply meant 'adults,' as he meant 'children' by impuberes.

² Lat. in continente proximo, 'on the nearest part of the mainland,' Utopia being an island. The possibility of such an outlet for surplus population was necessary for More's purpose, and the assumption made must not be too severely scrutinized. In fact, with the sparse population of England in his day (not exceeding $2\frac{1}{2}$ millions in England and Wales together) there must have been no lack of 'waste lands' within easy reach of many of its cities. See Professor J. E. Thorold Rogers' Industrial and Commercial History of England, 1892, p. 48.

³ This was the word used by More towards the end of the first chapter, to express the district assigned to each city. It is found in Pliny in the sense of a judge's district. Then, like the low Latin 'districtus,' it came to signify the diocese of a bishop; or, as here, an adjacent territory in general. See Maigne d'Arnis s. v.

much waste and vnoccupied grounde, receauinge also of the inhabitauntes^a to them, if they wil ioyne and dwel with them. They, thus ioyning and dwelling together, do easelye agre in one fassion of liuing, and that to the great wealth of both the peoples. For they so brynge the matter about by their lawes, that the grounde which before was nether good nor profitable for the one nor for the other, is nowe sufficiente and frutefull enough for them both. But if the inhabitauntes of that lande wyll not dwell with them, to be ordered by their lawes, then they dryue them out of those boundes, which they haue limited¹ and apointed out for themselues. And if they resiste and rebell, then they make warre agaynst them. For they counte this the moste iust cause of warre², when any people holdeth a piece of grounde voyde and vacaunt to no good nor profitable vse, keypyng other from the vse and possession of it, whiche notwithstanding by the lawe of nature ought thereof to be nowryshed and relieued. If any chauce do so muche dimynishe the numbere of anye

^a the same countrey people.

ascitis una terrae indigenis, si conuiere secum uelint. Cum uolentibus coniuncti in idem uitae institutum eosdemque mores facile coalescunt; idque utriusque populi bono. efficiunt enim suis institutis ut ea terra utrisque abunda³ sit, quae alteris aut^a parca ac maligna uidebatur. Renuentes ipsorum legibus uiuere propellunt his finibus quos sibi ipsi describunt. Aduersus repugnantes bello confligunt. nam eam iustissimam belli causam ducunt, quum populus quispiam eius soli, quo ipse non utitur, sed uelut inane ac uacuum possidet, aliis tamen qui ex naturae praescripto inde nutrirī debeant, usum ac possessionem interdicat. Si quando ullas ex suis urbibus aliquis casus

^a ante, A. recte.

¹ Rather, 'which they now mark out for themselves';—not that they had done so before.

² Mr. St. John, in his note on the passage, justifies the doctrine here laid down by an appeal to Grotius, De Jure, Lib. II. cap. 2 § iv. [qu. § xvii?]

³ The word is unclassical as an adjective.

of their cyties, that it cannot be fylled vp agayne wythout the diminishynge of the iust numbere of the other cyties (whiche they say chaunced but twyse syns the begynnyng of the lande, through a greate pestilente plage¹), then they make^a vp the numbere with cytezens fetched out of their owne forreyne townes ; for they hadde rather suffer theyr forreyn townes to decaye and peryshe, then annye cytie of their owne Ilande to be dimynshed.

But nowe agayne to the conuersation of the cytezens amonge themselves. The eldeste (as I sayde) rueleth the familie. The wyfes bee ministers to theyr husbandes, the chyldren to theyr parentes, and, to bee shorte, the yonger to theyr elders. Euerye cytie is diuided into foure² equall partes^b. In the myddes of euery quarter there is a market place of all maner of thynges. Thether the workes of euery familie be brought in to certeyne houses. And eousque imminuerit, ut ex aliis insulae partibus, seruato suo cuiusque urbis modo, resarciri non possint (quod bis dumtaxat ab omni aeuo, pestis grassante saeuitia, fertur contigisse), remigrantibus e colonia ciuibus replentur. Perire enim colonias potius patiuntur quam ullam ex insularis urbibus imminui.

^a fulfyll and make.

^b partes or quarters.

Sed ad conuictum ciuium reuertor. Antiquissimus (ut dixi) praest familiae. Ministri sunt uxores maritis, et liberi parentibus, atque in summa minores natu maioribus. Ciuitas omnis in quatuor aequales partes diuiditur. In medio cuiusque | partis forum est omnium rerum. Eo in 88 certas domos opera cuiusque familiae conuehantur, atque in horrea

Sic excludi potest
ociosa turba
ministrorum.

¹ The subject might be fresh in More's thoughts from the visitation in 1508, when, as a contemporary writer relates: 'passim undique occidunt vicitim in urbe hac non pauci' Prayers were publicly offered in St. Paul's, in August of that year, 'ob hanc sudoris plagam.' In 1517 it broke out again still more dreadfully. Bishop Longland, preaching soon after, speaks of the

'terribilem sudandi novitatem,' through which all was 'longe lateque depopulata.'—See the Sermones Ioannis Longlandi, 1518, ff. 15, 64; Gairdner's Historia . . . a Bernardo Andrea Tholosate conscripta, 1858, pp. 126, 127; Godwin's Annales, 1630 p. 27.

² These are the four wards mentioned above, p. 136.

euery kynde of thyng is layde vp seuerall in barnes or store houses. From hence the father of euery famelie or euery housholder fetcheth whatsoeuer he and hys haue neade of, and carieth it awaye with hym without money, without exchange, without annye gage or^a pledge. For whye should anye thyng be denyed vnto hym; seyng there is abundaunce of all thynges, and that it is not to be feared lest anye man wyll aske more then he neadeth? For whie should it be thoughte that man would aske more then enough, which is sewer neuer to lacke? Certeynly, in all kyndes of luyng creatures, other fere¹ of lacke doth cause couetousnes and rauyne, or in man only pryde; whiche counteth it a gloryouse thyng to passe and excell other in the superfluous and vayne ostentacion of thynges. The whyche kynde of vice amonge the Vtopians can haue no place.

Next to the market places that I spake of stonde meate markettes², whether be brought not onlye all sortes of singulae seorsum species distributae sunt. Ab hiis quilibet paterfamilias, quibus ipse suique opus habent, petit, ac sine pecunia, sine omni prorsus hostimento³, quicquid petierit, aufert. Quare enim negetur quicquam? quum et omnium rerum abunde satis sit, nec timor ullus subsit, ne quisquam plus quam sit opus flagitare uelit? Nam cur superuacua petiturus putetur is, qui certum habeat nihil sibi unquam defuturum? Nempe audum ac rapacem aut timor carendi facit, in omni animantum genere, aut in Rapacitas unde. homine sola reddit superbia, quae gloriae sibi ducit superflua rerum ostentatione caeteros antecellere; quod uitii genus in Vtopiensium institutis nullum omnino locum habet.

^a gage, pawne, or.

Adiuncta sunt foris (quae commemorauit) fora cibaria, in quae non ¹ As Mr. St. John points out (quoting Hobbes, De Cive, i. c. i.), while fear might be a motive for the formation of human societies, it is not the apprehension, but the actual consciousness, of want that rouses the savage instincts of animals.

² 'Provision markets,' as we should now call them; 'meat' being used in its old sense.

³ Found in Plautus, Asin. i. 3. 20, in the sense of requital, 'Par pari datum hostimentum est; opera pro pecunia.'

herbes, and the fruites of trees with breade, but also fishe, and all maner of iiiii. footed beastes, and wilde foule that be mans meate. But first the fylthynes and ordure therof is clene washed awaye in the runnyng ryuer, without the cytie¹, in places appoynted, mete for the same purpose. From thence the beastes brought^a in kylled, and cleane wasshed by the handes of their bondemen. For they permytte not their frie citezens to accustome there selves to the killing of beastes; through the vse whereof they thinke that^b clemencie, the genteleste affection of our nature, doth^c by litle and litle decaye^d and peryshe. Nother they suffer anye thyng that is fylthye, lothesome, or vnclenlye, to be brought into the cytie; least the ayre, by the stenche therof infected and corrupte, shoulde cause pestilente diseases².

^a be brought.

^b that omitted.

^c doth omitted.

^d to decaye.

olera modo^a, arborumque fructus et panes comportantur, sed pisces praeterea, quadrupedumque et auium quicquid esculentum est, extra urbem locis appositis, ubi fluento tabum ac sordes eluantur. Hinc deportant pecudes occisas depuratasque manibus famulorum; nam neque suos ciues patiuntur assuescere laniatu animalium, cuius usu clementiam, humanissimum naturae nostrae affectum, paulatim deperire putant; neque sordidum quicquam atque immundum, cuius putredine corruptus aer morbum posset inuehere, perferri in urbem sinunt.

Tabes ac sordes pestem inuehit ciuitatibus.

Ex pecudum laniena didicimus et homines iugulare.

^a Post olera modo A. exhibit: fructusque et panes comportantur, sed pisces praeterea carnesque extra urbem locis appositis, ubi fluento tabum ac sordes eluantur, pecudes occisas. B. rectius pecudes occisae depurataeque.

¹ See the note before, p. 128. In this respect More had not risen, nor in fact have we, above the ideas of his age, which allowed rivers to be made receptacles for garbage.

² We have of late years made some progress in this direction. But we leave in full swing another abuse, as regards the pollution of the atmosphere, which could hardly have occurred to the mind of More. The mill chimneys, in many manufacturing towns, still discharge their volumes of smoke into the air, in defiance of all restraint. That so many tons of fuel should be daily wasted, appears to be a matter of no more concern than the blighting of the herbage for miles around, or the injury done to the health of thousands.

Moreouer euerye strete hath certeyne great large halles sett in equal distaunce one from an other, euerye one knowne by a seuerall name. In thies halles dwell the Syphograuntes¹. And to euery one of the same halles be apoynted xxx. families, of^a ether side xv. The stewardestes of euery halle at a certayn houre come in to the meate markettes, where they receyue meate accordinge to the nombre of their halles².

But first and chieflie of all, respect is had to the sycke that be cured³ in the hospitalles. For in the circuite of the citie, a litle without the walles, they haue .iiii. hospitalles; so bygge, so wyde, so ample, and so lardge⁴, that they may seme .iiii. litle townes; which were deuised of that bygnes, partely to thintent the sycke, be they neuer so many in nombre, shuld not lye to thronge or strayte, and therefore uneasely and incomodiously; and partely that they which were taken and holden with contagious diseases, suche as be wonte by infection to crepe from one to an other, myght be laid a part farre from the company

^a on.

89 Habet praeterea quilibet uicus aulas quasdam capaces, aequali ab sese inuicem | interuallo distantes, nomine quanque suo cognitas. Has colunt Syphogranti; quarum unicuique triginta familiae, uidelicet ab utroque latere quindecim, sunt adscriptae, cibum ibi sump-turae. Obsonatores cuiusque aulae certa hora conueniunt in forum, ac relato suorum numero cibum petunt.

Sed prima ratio aegrotorum habetur; qui in publicis hospitiiis curantur. Nam quatuor habent in ambitu ciuitatis hospitia, paulo extra muros, tam capacia ut totidem oppidulis aequari possint, tum ut neque aegrotorum numerus quamlibet magnus auguste collocaretur, et per hoc incommode, tum quo hii qui tali morbo tenerentur, cuius contagio solet ab alio ad alium serpere,

Cura aegrotorum.

¹ See above, p. 135.

² That is, to the number of persons in their respective halls.

³ In the old sense of 'cured,' that is, being attended to, or taken care of.

⁴ Note the four equivalents for capacia.

of the residue¹. Thies hospitalles be so well apointed, and with al thynges necessary to health so furnished; and more ouer so diligent attendaunce through the continual presence of cunnyng phisitians is geuen, that though no man be sent thither against his will, yet notwithstandinge there is no sicke persone in all the citie, that had not rather lye there then at home in his owne house². When the stewarde of the sicke hath receiued suche meates as the phisitians haue prescribed, then the beste is equally deuided among the halles, according to the company of euery one, sauing that there is had a respect to the prince, the byshop³, the tranibours, and to ambassadours, and all straungers, if there be any, whiche be verye fewe and longius ab^a aliorum coetu semoueri possint. Haec hospitia ita sunt instructa, atque omnibus rebus quae ad salutem conferant referta, tum tam tenera ac sedula cura adhibetur, tam assidua medicorum peritissimorum praesentia, ut quum illuc nemo mittatur inuitus, nemo tamen fere in tota urbe sit, qui aduersa ualetudine laborans non ibi decumbere quam domi suae praeferat. Quum aegrotorum obsonator cibos ex medicorum praescripto receperit, deinceps optima quaeque inter aulas aequabiliter pro suo cuiusque numero distribuuntur, nisi quod principis, pontificis, et Tranibororum^b respectus habetur, ac legatorum etiam, et exterorum omnium (si qui sunt, qui pauci ac raro

^a om. A.

^b traniborum, A.

¹ More's enlightened discernment in all this will be readily acknowledged. But the fact that so much provision for the sick should be contemplated by him in his happy island, shows how heavily Death and Disease had laid their hands on society in his age. Comp. Wright's History of Caricature and Grottesque in Art, 1865, p. 217.

² In reading this, we should remember what scanty provision for the sick there was in London when More wrote. St. Bartholomew's, indeed, existed; but St. Thomas's, founded as an almonry, was not opened for its present purpose till 1552. Guy's and St. George's are both of last century. The foundation of the Royal College of Physicians, with its attendant improvements in medical science, was in 1518, two years after the appearance of Utopia. Possibly Linacre was stimulated in his good work by the picture here drawn.

³ He is mentioned in the last chapter as 'the chiefe heade of them all'—that is, of the priests; but comparatively little is said about him.

seldome. But they also, when they be there, haue certeyne^a houses apointed and prepared for them.

To thies halles at the set houres of dinner and supper cummith all the hole Siphograuntie or warde, warned by the noyse of a brasen trumpet; except such as be sicke in the hospitalles or els in their owne houses. Howe be it, no man is prohibited or forbid, after the halles be serued, to fetch home meate out of the market to his own house. For they knowe that no man wyl doo it without a cause resonable. For thoughe no man be prohibited to dyne at home, yet no man doth it willynglye, because it is counted a pointe of small honestie. And also it were a follye to take the payne to dresse a badde dyner at home, when they maye be welcome to good and fyne fare so nyghe hande at the hall. In this hal all vyle seruice, all slauerie and drudgerye, with all laboursome toyle and^b busines, is done by bondemen. But the women of euery famelie by course haue the office and charge of cokerye, for sethinge and dressynge the meate, and orderyng al thinges therto belonging. They syt at iii. tables or moo, sunt): sed hiis quoque, cum adsunt, domicilia certa atque instructa parantur.

^a certeyne seuerall.

^b and base.

- 90 Ad has aulas prandii coenaeque statis horis tota | siphograntia conuenit, aeneae tubae clangore commonefacta, nisi qui aut in hospitiiis aut domi decumbunt. quanquam nemo prohibetur, postquam aulis est satisfactum, e foro domum cibum petere. Sciunt enim neminem id temere facere. nam etsi domi prandere nulli uetitum sit, nemo tamen hoc libenter facit, cum neque honestum habeatur, et stultum sit deterioris parandi prandii sumere laborem, cum lautum atque opiparum praesto apud aulam tam propinquam sit. In hac aula ministeria omnia, in quibus paulo plus sordis aut laboris est, obeunt serui. Caeterum coquendi parandique cibi officium, et totius denique instruendi conuiuui solae mulieres exercent, cuiusque uidelicet familiae per uices. Tribus

Conuiuia com-
 munita, promiscuaque.

Vt ubique libertatis habetur ratio, ne quid fiat
 a coactis.

Foeminae
 ministrae in conuiuuiis.

accordyng to the numbere of their company. The men syt vpon the benche next the wall, and the women agaynst them on the other syde of the table; that, if anye sodeyne euell should chaunce to them, as many tymes happeneth to women with chylde, they maye ryse wythout trouble or disturbaunce of anye body, and go thence into the nurserie.

The nourceis sitte seuerall alone with their yonge suckelinges in a certayne parloure apointed and deputed to the same purpose, neuer without fire and cleane water, nor yet without cradels; that when they wyll they maye laye downe the yong infauntes, and at their pleasure take them out of their swathyng clothes and holde them to the fyere, and refreshe them with playe. Euery mother is nource to her owne chylde¹, onles other death or syckenes be the let. When that chaunceth, the wyues of the Siphograuntes quykelye prouyde a nource. And that is not harde to be done. For they that can doo it do^a proffer themselves to no seruice so gladlye as to that. Because pluribusue mensis pro numero conuiuarum discumbitur. Viri ad parietem, foeminae exterius collocantur; ut si quid his subiti oboriatu mali, quod uterum gerentibus interdum solet accidere, imperturbatis ordinibus exurgant, atque inde ad nutrices abeant.

^a do omitted.

Sedent illae quidem seorsum cum lactentibus^a in coenaculo quodam ad id destinato, nunquam sine foco atque aqua munda, nec absque cunis interim, ut et reclinare liceat infantulos, et ad ignem cum uelint exemptos fasciis liberare ac ludo reficere. suae quaeque soboli nutrix est, nisi aut mors aut morbus impediatur. id cum accidit, uxores Syphograntorum propere nutricem quaerunt, nec id difficile est. Nam quae id praestare possunt, nulli officio sese offerunt q¹

^a lactantibus, A.

¹ On the neglect of this first of parental duties, Erasmus has some bitter remarks in his dialogue Puerpera. 'In tales feminas,' he says, 'mihi competere Graecorum videtur etymologia, qui μήτηρ dici putant a μή τηρεῖν, hoc est a non seruando. Nam prorsus conducticiam nutricem infantulo adhuc a matre tepenti addiscere, genus est expositionis.'

that there thys kynde of pitie is muche praysed; and the chylde that is nouryshed euer after taketh hys nource for his owne naturall mother. Also amonge the nourceis syt all the chylde that be vnder the age of v. yeares. All the other children of both kyndes, aswell boyes as gyrles, that be vnder the age of marryage, doo other serue at the tables¹, or els if they be to yonge therto, yet they stande by with meruelous silence². That whiche is giuen to them from the table they eate, and other seuerall dynner tyme they haue none. The Siphograunt and his wife sitteth in the middes of the highe table, forasmuche as that is counted the honerablest place, and because from thence al the hole companye is in their syght. For that table standeth ouer wharte³ the ouer ende of the halle. To libentius, quoniam et omnes eam misericordiam laude prosequantur, et qui educatur nutricem parentis agnoscit loco. In antro nutricum considunt^a pueri omnes, qui primum lustrum non^b expleuere. caeteri impuberes, quo in numero ducunt quicumque sexus alterius utrius intra nubiles annos sunt, aut ministrant discumbentibus, aut qui per aetatem nondum ualent, abstinent tamen, atque id summo cum silentio. utriusque quod a sedentibus porrigitur, eo uescuntur, nec aliud discretum prandendi tempus habent. In medio primae mensae, qui summus locus est, et cui (nam ea mensa suprema in parte coenaculi transuersa est) totus conuentus conspicitur, Syphograntus cum uxore

Laude et officio
ciues optime inuitantur ad
recte agendum.

Educatio sobolis.

^a considunt, A.

^b om. A.

¹ In a little tract, De disciplina et institutione Puerorum, of which the fourth edition was published in Paris in 1531, the well-taught boy has a chapter of instructions De gestibus in ministerio mensae. He is first taught how and in what order to 'lay the table.' Then, when all is ready, the direction is given him: 'Erectus et compositis pedibus sta, sollicito animaduertens ne desit quid. Et cum infundendum, siue quid porrigendum, apponendum, aut tollendum, ciuiliter id feceris.' As to the silence mentioned just after in the text, the rule is: 'Astans non turbabis, uel interturbabis aliorum sermonem; sed interrogatus breuiter respondeto' (p. 29).

² In Holbein's drawing of the family of Sir Thomas More, only two out of the ten figures are seated—Sir Thomas and his aged father. The rest are all either standing or kneeling.

³ That is, overthwart, or across.

them be ioyned ii. of the anctientest and eldest. For at euery table they syt iiiii. at a meesse¹. But if there be a church standing in that Siphograuntie, or warde, then the priest and his wyfe sitteth with the Siphograunte, as chiefe in the company. On both sydes of them sytte yonge men, and nexte vnto them agayne olde men. An thus throughe out all the house² equall of age be sette together, and yet be nyxte with^a vnequall ages. Thys they saye was ordeyned, to the intent that the sage grautie and reuerence of the elders should kepe the yongers from wanton licence of wordes and behaiour; for as muche as nothyng can be so secretly spoken or done at the table, but either they that syt on the one syde or on the other must nedes perceiue it. The disshes be not set downe in ordre from the first place, but all the old men (whoes places be marked with som speciall token to be knowen) be first serued of there meate, and then the residue equally. The old men deuide their dainties³, as they think best, to

^a and matched with.

considet. His adiunguntur duo ex natu maximis. Sedent enim per omnes mensas quaterni. At si templum in ea Syphograntia situm est, sacerdos eiusque uxor cum Syphogranto sedent ut praesideant. Ab utraque parte collocantur iuniores; post senes rursus; atque hoc pacto per totam domum: et aequales inter se iunguntur, et dissimilibus tamen immiscentur; quod ideo ferunt institutum, ut senum grauitas ac reuerentia (quum nihil ita in mensa fieri diciue potest, ut eos ab omni parte uicinos effugiat) iuniores ab improba uerborum gestuumque licentia cohibeat. Ciborum fercula non a primo loco deinceps apponuntur, sed senioribus primum omnibus (quorum insignes | loci 92 sunt) optimus quisque cibus infertur; deinde reliquis aequaliter ministratur. At senes lautitias suas (quarum non tanta erat copia ut

¹ See the Introduction, pp. xviii, xlv.

² That is, the hall. We still speak of 'a full house' at a theatre, 'houses of parliament,' &c. In some parts of England, the one large living-room in a farmhouse, answering to the hall in a mansion, is called the 'house-place' or 'house.'

³ The clause within parentheses in the Latin is left out by the translator.

the yonger that sit of both sides them^a. Thus the elders be not defrauded of their dewe honoure, and neuerthelesse equall commoditie commeth to euery one.

They begin euerye dynner and supper of reading sumthing that pertaineth to good maners and vertue¹. But it is short, becawse no man shalbe greued therwith. Here of thelders take occasion of honest communication, but nother sad nor vnpleasaunt². Howbeit, they do not spend all the hole dyner time themselves with long and tedious talkes; but they gladly here also the yong men; yea and do^b purposly prouoke them to talke, to thentent that they maye haue a profe of euery mans wit and towardnes or disposition to vertue, which commonly in ye liberte of posset totam per domum affatim distribui) pro suo arbitratu circum-sedentibus impartiantur. Sic et maioribus natu suos seruatur honos, et commodi tantundem tamen ad omneis peruenit.

^a yonger on eche syde of them.

^b do omitted.

Omne prandium coenamque ab aliqua lectione auspicantur, quae ad mores faciat; sed breui tamen, ne fastidio sit. Ab hac seniores honestos sermones, sed neque tristes ac^a infacetos, ingerunt. At nec longis logis³ totum occupant prandium. quin audiunt libenter iuuenes quoque; atque^b adeo de industria prouocant, quo et indolis cuiusque et ingenii per conuiuii libertatem prodentis sese

Id hodie uix monachi
observant.

Sermones in conuiuiis.

^a nec, A.

^b om. A.

Burnet supplies it: 'if there is not such an Abundance of them that the whole Company may be served alike.'

¹ A common custom at the time, though the marginal note seems to point to its being on the decline. When Ralph Collingwood, Dean of Lichfield, who died in 1518, was making further provision for the College of St. Thomas in Stratford-on-Avon, he ordained that his choristers 'at dinner and supper time should constantly be in the College, to wait at the Table, and to read the Bible, or some other authentic Book.'—Lansdowne MS. 978, fol. 210. More practised the same custom at his own table. See Bridgett's Life, p. 140.

² Compare what Erasmus says of Colet, when similarly engaged: 'He would so season the discourse that, though both serious and religious, it had nothing tedious or affected about it.' Letter to Justus Jonas (ed. 1883), p. 26.

³ Comp. Plautus, Men. v. 2. 29, 'Loquere, uter meruistis culpam, paucis; non longos logos.'

feasting doth shew and vtter it selfe. Their dyners be verye short; but there suppers be sumwhat longer; because that after dynner followeth laboure; after supper sleape and naturall reste; whiche they thynke to be of no^a more strengthe and efficacy to holsome and healthfull digestion. No supper is passed without musicke¹; nor their bankettes lacke no conceytes nor ionckettes. They burne swete gummes and spesces for^b perfumes and pleasaunt smelles, and sprinckle about swete oyntmentes and waters; yea they leaue nothyng vndone that maketh for the cheryng of the company. For they be muche enclyned to this opinion: to thinke no kynde of pleasure forbidden, wherof cummeth no harme.

Thus therefore and after this sorte they lyue together in the cite; but in the contrey they that dwell alone, farre from anye neyghbours, do dyne and suppe at home in their own houses. For no famelie there lacketh anye kynde of victualles, as from whome cummeth all that the cytezens eate and lyue bye.

^a no omitted.

^b or.

capiant experimentum. Prandia breuiuscula sunt, coenae largiores; quod labor illa, has somnus et nocturna quies excipit; quam illi ad salubrem concoctionem magis efficacem putant. Nulla coena sine musica transigitur, nec ullis caret secunda mensa bellariis. odores incendunt et unguenta spargunt^a, nihilque non faciunt quod exhilarare conuiuas possit. sunt enim hanc in partem aliquanto procliuiiores, ut nullum uoluptatis genus (ex quo nihil sequatur incommodi) censeant interdictum.

Hoc pacto igitur in urbe conuiuunt; at ruri, qui longius ab sese dissiti sunt, omnes domi quisque suae comedunt. nulli enim familiae quicquam ad uictum deest, quippe a quibus id totum uenit quo uescantur urbici.

^a spargunt, A.

¹ On More's fondness for music, see the Introduction, p. xxiv, and the note below, p. 295. A viol is seen hanging up in Holbein's drawing of his household.

² See Ray: English Proverbs, 1768, p. 27.

¶ Of their

iourneyenge or trauaylynge a brode, with dyuers other matters cun-nyngly reasoned and wittilie discussed¹.

BUt if any be desierous to vysite other their fryndes that dwel^a in an other Cytie, or to see the place it selfe, they easelye obteyne lycence of their Siphograuntes and Tranibores, oneles there bee some profitable let². No man goeth out alone; but a companye is sente furth to gether with their princes letters, whiche do testifie that they haue lycence to go that iorney, and prescribeth also the day of their retourne³. They haue a wageyn geuen them, with a common bondman, whiche driueth the oxen

^a dwelling.

AT si quos aut amicorum alia in urbe commorantium, aut ipsius etiam uidendi loci desyderium coeperit, a Syphograntis ac Traniboris suis ueniam facile impetrant, nisi siquis usus impediatur. Mittitur ergo simul numerus aliquis cum epistola principis, quae et datam peregrinandi copiam testatur, et reditus diem praescribit. Vehiculum datur cum seruo publico, qui agat boues et curet.

¹ Robynson properly expands the title of this chapter, which treats of many subjects besides the Peregrinatio of the Utopians.

² That is, as Burnet words it, 'when there is no particular occasion for him [them] at Home.'

³ This may have been suggested by what Plutarch tells us of an ordinance of Lycurgus for the Spartans: 'For the same reason he would not permit all that desired it to go abroad and see other countries, lest they should contract foreign manners, [or] gain traces of a life of little discipline, and of a different form of government.'—Lives, tr. by the Langhorns, ed. 1805, i. p. 155.

and taketh charge of them. But onles they haue women in their company, they sende home the wageyn againe, as an impediment and a let. And though they carrye nothyng furth wit them, yet in all their iorney they lacke nothing. For whersoouer they come they be at home. If they tary in a place longer then one day, than there euery one of them falleth to his own occupation, and be very gentilly entertained of the workmen and companies of the same craftes. If any man of his owne head and without leaue walke out of his precinct and boundes, taken without the princes lettres, he is brought again for a fugitive or a runaway with great shame and rebuke, and is shapely^a punished. If he be taken in that faulte agayne, he is punished with bondage.

If any be desierous to walke a brode into the fieldes, or into the contrey that belongeth to the same citie that he dwelleth in, obteynnyng the good will of his father, and the consent of his wife¹, he is not prohibited. But into what part of the contrey soeuer he cummeth, he hath no meat geuin him untill he haue wrought out his forenones taske, or els dispatched so muche worke as there is wonte to be caeterum nisi mulieres in coetu habeant, uehiculum uelut onus et impedimentum remittitur. Toto itinere cum nihil secum efferant, nihil deficit tamen; ubique enim domi sunt. Si quo in loco diutius uno die commorentur, suam ibi quisque artem exercet, atque ab artis eiusdem opificibus humanissime tractantur. Si semet autore quisquam extra suos fines uagetur, deprehensus sine principis diplomate, contumeliose habitus, pro fugitio reducitur, castigatus acriter. idem ausus denuo, seruitute plectitur.

^a sharply.

Quod si quem libido incessat per suae ciuitatis agros palandi, uenia patris et consentiente coniuge non prohibetur. Sed in quodcunque rus peruenerit, nullus ante cibus datur, quam ante meridiana operis pensum (aut quantam ante coenam ibi laborari solet)

¹ 'The complaisance of the Utopians respect imitate their example!'— towards their wives is truly exemplary. DIBDIN.
I fear the Europeans do not in every wrought befor supper. Obseruing this lawe and condition, he may go whether he well within the boundes of his owne citie. For he shalbe no les profitable to the citie, then if he were within it.

Now yow see howe litle libertie they haue to loyter; how they can haue no cloke or pretence to ydelnes. There be nether wyn tauernes, nor ale houses, nor stewes, nor any occasion of uice or wickednes, no lurking corners, no places of wicked councelles or vnlawfull assembles; but they be in the present sight, and vnder the iyes of euery man; so that of necessitie they must other applie their accustomed labours, or else recreate themselues with honest and laudable pastymes.

This fassion being^a vsed among the people, they must of necessitie haue^b store and plentie of all thinges. And seing they be al therof parteners equally, therfore cane no man there be poore or nedye. In the counsel of Amaurot (whether, as I sayde¹, euery citie sendeth .iiii.

^a and trade of life being.

^b it cannot be chosen but that they must haue.

absoluerit. Hac lege quouis intra suae urbis fines ire licet. Erit enim non minus utilis urbi quam si in urbe esset.

Iam uidetis quam nulla sit usquam ociandi licentia, nullus inertiae praetextus, nulla taberna uinaria, nulla ceruisiaria, nusquam | lupanar, nulla corruptelae occasio, nullae latebrae, conciliabulum² nullum, sed omnium praesentes oculi necessitatem aut consueti laboris aut oculi non inhonesti faciunt.

O sanctam rempublicam, et uel Christianis imitandam.

Quem populi morem necesse est omnium rerum copiam sequi. atque ea quum aequabiliter ad omnes perueniat, fit nimirum ut inops esse nemo aut mendicus possit. In senatu Amaurotico³ (quem uti dixi terni quotannis

Aequabilitas facit ut omnibus sufficiat.

¹ See above, p. 119.

² So used in Plautus, Bacchid. I. i. 47: 'ut solet in istis fieri conciliabulis.'

³ In the first edition, instead of Amaurotico, the word is here Menti-

rano, suggesting the derivation from mentiri 'to lie.' As More's other imaginary names are mostly from the Greek, and as Mentirano might sound rather too blunt, we can see reasons why he should have made the alteramen a pece yearly), assone as it is perfectly knowen of what thynges there is in euery place plentie, and agayne what thynges be skant in anye place ; incontinent the lacke of the one is performed¹ and fylled vp with the aboundaunce of the other. And this they doo frelye without any benefite, takyng nothing agayn of them to whom the thinges is geuen ; but those cyties that haue geuen of their store to anye other cytie that lacketh, requyrynge nothyng agayne of the same cytie, do take suche thinges as they lacke of an other cytie, to whome^a they gaue nothyng. So the hole Ilande is as it were one famelie or housholde.

But when they haue made sufficiente prouision of stoore for them selves (whiche they thinke not doone untill they haue prouyded for two yeares followynge, bicause of the vncertentie of the nexte yeares proffe²), then of those thynges wherof they haue abundaunce they carry furthe into other contreis greate plenty ; as grayne, honnye, wulle, flaxe, woode, madder, purple die^b omni ex urbe frequentant) ubi primum constiterit quae res quoque loco abundet, rursum cuius alicubi malignior prouentus fuerit, alterius inopiam alterius protinus ubertas explet ; atque id gratuito faciunt. nihil uicissim ab his recipientes quibus donant. Sed quae de suis rebus unicuiquam urbi dederint, nihil ab ea repetentes, ab alia cui nihil impenderunt, quibus egent accipiunt. Ita tota insula uelut una familia est.

^a to the which.

^b died.

Respublica nihil
aliud quam magna quaedam familia est.

At postquam satis prouisum ipsis est (quod non antea factum censent quam in biennium propter anni sequentis euentum prospexerint) tum ex his quae supersunt magnam uim frumenti, mellis, lanae, ligni, cocci et tion. But why, when he had the council of Amaurote (already so named) in his mind, he should ever have coined this other word, is a little curious. Was the familiar sound of 'in Parlamento' in his thoughts, and did he wish to convey that the council at St. Stephen's was not so much the 'national palaver,' as Carlyle called it, as something worse?

¹ That is, completed. See the Glossary.

² From being used to render the Latin euentum, this appears intended

felles¹, waxe, tallowe, lether, and liuyng beastes. And the seuenth part of all thies thynges they gyue franckely and frelye to the poore of that contrey. The resydewe they sell at a reasonable and meane price. By this trade of traffique or marchandise, they bring into their own contrey not only great plentie of golde and siluer, but also all suche thynges as they lacke at home, whych is almoste nothyng but Iron². And by reason they haue longe vsed thys trade, nowe they haue more abundaunce of thies thynges then any man wyll beleue. Nowe, therefore, they care not whether they sell for reddye moneye, or els vpon truste to be paide at a daye, and to haue the most part in debtes. But in so doying³ they neuer followe the credence of pryuat men, but the assureaunce or warrauntise of the hole citye, by instrumentes and writinges made in that behalfe accordinglye.

conchyliorum, uellerum, cerae, seui, corii, ad haec animalium quoque in alias regiones exportant. quarum rerum omnium septimam partem inopibus eius regiones dono dant: reliquam precio modico uenditant. quo ex commercio non eas modo merces quibus domi egent (nam id fere nihil est praeter ferrum) sed argenti atque auri praeterea magnam uim in patriam reportant. Cuius rei diutina consuetudine supra quam credi possit, ubique iam carum rerum copia abundant. Itaque nunc parum pensi habent, praesente ne pecunia an in diem uendant, multoque maximam partem habeant in nominibus; in quibus tamen faciendis non priuatorum unquam sed confectis ex more instrumentis

Negotiatio
Vtopiensium.

to mean 'what the next year might prove to be.' But see the Glossary.

¹ Robynson's first reading is here more correct than his second. It should be 'purple die, felles,' &c.; the items being separate. Burnet leaves the words out.

² There is nothing to show that More is here thinking of the imports and exports of his own country. But, as a matter of fact, steel and iron were then among its imports. In The Common Weal of the Realm of England, before quoted, among the articles which the king must import from abroad, are 'yron, steile, handgonns, gonpowder,' and many other things. p. 34.

³ Robynson has not understood the idiom nomina facere, 'to lend.' Comp. Seneca, De Vita beata, c. 24: 'Nunquam magis nomina facio quam cum dono.'

When the daye of paymente is come and expyred, the cytye¹ gathereth vp the debte of the priuate dettours, and putteth it into the common boxe, and so long hath the vse and proffytte of it, vntyll the vtopians their creditours demaunde it. The mooste parte of it they neuer aske. For that thyng whyche is to them no proffyte, to take it from other to whom it is proffytable, they thinke it no righte nor conscience. But yf the case so stande, that they must lende parte of that money to an other people, then they requyre theyre debte; or when they haue warre. For the whyche purpose onelye they keap at home al the treasure which they haue, to be holpen and socoured by yt other in extreame ieopardyes, or in suddeyne daungers; but especyallye and chieflye to hierer therwyth, and that for vnreasonable greate wayges, straunge soldyours. For they hadde rather put straungers in ieopardye then theyre owne contreye men; knowinge that for moneye enoughe their enemyes themselves manye tymes may be bowghte and⁴ solde, or els throughe treason be sette togethers

⁴ or.

publicam urbis fidem sequuntur. Ciuitas, ubi solutionis dies aduenerit, a priuatis debitoribus exigit creditum, atque in aerarium redigit, eiusque pecuniae quoad ab Vtopiensibus repetatur, usura fruitur. Illi maximam partem nunquam repetunt. Nam quae res apud se nullum habet usum, eam ab his auferre, quibus usui est, haud aequum censent. Caeterum si res ita poscat ut eius aliquam partem alii populo mutuam daturi sint², tum demum poscunt, aut quum bellum gerendum est; quam in rem unam totum illum thesaurum quem habent domi seruant, uti aut extremis in periculis, aut in subitis, praesidio sit; potissimum quo milites externos (quos libentius quam suos obiciunt discrimini) immodico stipendio conducant, gnari multitudine pecuniae hostes ipsos plerunque mercabiles, et uel proditione uel infestis etiam

Vt nusquam non meminerunt suae communitatis.

Qua ratione possit esse utiles pecunia.

Sanctus est bellum pecunia aut arte declinare, quam multa sanguinis humani iactura gerere.

¹ That is, the foreign city, to which merchandise has been exported.

² Instead of daturi sint, it should rather have been dent.

by the eares emonge themselves. For thys cause they kype an inestymable treasure; but yet not as a treasure; but so they haue yt and vse yt as in good faythe I am ashamede to shewe, fearynge that my woordes shal not be beleued¹. And thys I haue more cause to feare, for that I knowe howe dyfficultlye and hardelye I meselfe wolde haue beleued an othere man tellynge the same, yf I hadde not presentlye scene yt wyth myne owne eyes. For yt muste nedes be, that howe farre a thing is dissonaunt and disagreeinge from the guyse and trade² of the hearers, so farre shall yt be owte of theyr beleffe. Howe be yt, a wyse and indyfferente estymer of thynges wyll not greatly marueil perchaunce, seing al theyre other lawes and customes doo so muche dyfferre from owres, yf the vse also of golde and syluer amonge them be applyed³ rather to theyr owne fassyons then to owers. I meane, in that they occupye⁴ not moneye themselves, but kepe yt for that chaunce; whyche as yt maye happen, so yt maye be that yt shall neuer come to passe.

signis inter se conmitti. Hanc ob causam inaestimabilem thesaurum seruunt; at non ut thesaurum tamen, sed ita habent, quomodo me narrare profecto deterret pudor, metuentem ne fidem oratio non sit habitura; quod eo iustius ueveor, quo O artificem.
 magis mihi sum conscius, nisi uidissem praesens, quam aegre potuissem 96 ipse perduci ut alteri idem recensenti crederem. Necessè est enim fere, quam quicquam est ab eorum qui audiunt moribus alienum, tam idem procul illis abesse a fide. quanquam prudens rerum aestimator minus fortasse mirabitur, quum reliqua eorum instituta tam longe ab nostris differant, si argenti quoque atque auri usus ad ipsorum potius quam ad nostri moris rationem accommodetur: nempe quum pecunia non utantur ipsi, sed in eum seruent euentum, qui ut potest usu uenire, ita fieri potest ut nunquam incidat.

¹ The art shown in this prelude is pointed out in the marginal note. What More is thus prefacing is the conduct of the Utopians in despising gold and silver in comparison with iron, but keeping a great store of those metals, to buy the services of such as held them precious.

² We should now say 'from the manners and customs;' Lat. moribus. See the Glossary.

³ That is, adapted.

⁴ Compare the 'new ropes never occupied' (used) of Judges xvi. 11.

In the meane tyme golde and syluer, whereof moneye ys made, they doo soo vse, as none of them dothe more estyme yt, then the verye nature of the thyng deserueth. And then who dothe not playnlye see howe farre yt ys vnder Iron? as wythoute the whyche men canne no better lyue then withowte fyere and water; whereas to golde and syluer nature hathe geuen no vse that we may not wel lacke, yf that the folly of men hadde not sette it in hygher estymacyon for the rarenes sake. But, of the contrary parte, nature, as a moste tender and louynge mother, hath placed the beste and moste necessarye thynges open a brode; as the ayere, the water, and the earth it selfe; and hath remoued and hydde farthest from vs vayne and vnprofytable thynges¹. Therefore yf thies metalles among them shoulde be fast locked vp in some tower, it myghte be suspected that the prynce and the cowncell (as the people is euer foolyshelye ymagininge) intended by some subtyltye to deceaue the commons, and to take some proffette of it to themselves. Furthermore,

Interim aurum argentumque (unde ea fit) sic apud se habent, ut ab nullo pluris aestimetur quam rerum ipsarum natura meretur. qua quis non uidet quam longe infra ferrum sunt? ut sine quo non hercle magis quam absque igni atque aqua uiuere mortales queant, quum^a interim auro argentoque nullum usum, quo non facile careamus, natura tribuerit, nisi hominum stultitia precium raritati fecisset. quin contra, uelut parens indulgentissima optima quaeque in propatulo posuerit, ut aerem, aquam ac tellurem ipsam; longissime uero uana ac nihil profutura semouerit. Ergo haec metalla si apud eos in turrim aliquam abstruderentur, princeps ac senatus in suspicionem uenire posset (ut est uulgi stulta solertia) ne, deluso per technam populo, ipsi aliquo inde commodo fruereutur. porro si phyalas inde aliaque id genus

^a quum interim . . . fecisset desunt in A.

¹ Cicero has a similar thought, De Nat. Deorum, ii. c. 60: 'Nos e terrae cavernis ferrum elicimus, rem ad colendos agros necessariam; nos aeris, argenti, auri venas, penitus abditas, inuenimus, et ad usum aptas et ad ornatum decoras.'

if they should make therof plat¹ and such other finely and cunningly wrought stuffe; yf at anye tyme they shoulde haue occasyon to breake it, and melte it agayne, and^a therwyth to paye their souldiours wages²; they see and perceiue very well that men wolde be lothe to parte from those thynges that they ons begonne to haue pleasure and delyte in.

To remedye all thys, they haue fownde owt a meanes, which, as it is agreable to al their other lawes and customes, so it is from ours, where golde is so muche set by and so delygently kepte, very farre discrepant and repugnaunt; and therfore vncredible, but only to them that be wise³. For where as they eat and drincke in earthen and glasse vesselles, which in dede be curiously and properlie made, and yet be of very small value; of gold and siluer they make commonlye chamber pottes, and other like^b vesselles that serue for moste vile vses, not only in their common halles, but in euery mans priuate house. Furthermore of ^a and omitted.

^b like omitted.

opera fabre excusa conficerent, siquando incidisset occasio, ut conflanda sint rursus, atque in militum eroganda stipendium, uident 97 nimirum fore ut | aegre patiantur auelli quae semel in delitiis habere coepissent.

His rebus uti occurrant, excogitauere quandam rationem, ut reliquis ipsorum institutis consentaneam, ita ab nostris (apud quos aurum tanti fit, ac tam diligenter conditur) longissime abhorrentem, eoque nisi peritis non credibilem. Nam quum in fictilibus e terra utroque, elegantissimis quidem illis sed uilibus tamen, edant bibantque, ex auro atque argento, non in communibus aulis modo, sed in priuatis etiam domibus, matellas passim ac sordidissima quaeque uasa conficiunt. Ad haec

O magnificam
auri contu-meliam.

¹ That is, plate. Burnet has: 'if they should work it into Vessels, or any Sort of Plate.'

² As was afterwards done by Charles I, in 1642, when the two Universities sent their plate to Nottingham, to be converted into money for the king's use.

³ Rather, 'to those who know it by experience'—peritis.

the same mettalles they make greate cheynes with^a fetters and giues, wherin they tye their bondmen. Finally, who so euer for any offence be infamed, by their eares hange ringes of golde; vpon their fingers they were ringes of golde, and about their neckes cheynes of gold; and in conclusion their heades be tiede about with golde¹. Thus, by all meanes that may be^b, they procure to haue gold and siluer emong them in reproche and infamy. And therefore^c thies metalles, which other nations do as greuously and sorroufully forgo, as in a maner from their owne liues: if they should all together at ones² be taken from the vtopians, no man there wold thinke that he had lost the worth of one farthing.

They gather also peerles by the sea side, and Diamondes and Carbuncles vpon certein rockes; and yet they seke not for them; but by chauce finding them they cutt and ^a with omitted.

^b all means possible.

^c therefore omitted.

catenas et crassas compedes, quibus coherent seruos, iisdem ex metallis operantur. Postremo quoscunque aliquod crimen infames facit, ab horum auribus anuli dependent aurei, digitos aurum cingit, aurea torques ambit collum, et caput denique auro uincitur. Ita omnibus curant modis, ut apud se aurum argentumque in ignomina sint, atque hoc pacto fit ut haec metalla, quae caeterae gentes non minus fere dolenter ac uiscera sua distrahi patiuntur, apud Vtopienses, si semel omnia res postulet efferri, nemo sibi iacturam unius fecisse assis uideretur.

Margaritas praeterea legunt in littoribus; quin in rupibus quibusdam adamantes ac pyropos quoque: neque tamen quaerunt, sed

¹ 'It is amusing,' as Father Bridgett says in his Life (p. 184), 'that the writer of all this should have been made a knight, or, as he was then called, Equus auratus, "a gilded knight," because this dignity both entitled him and required of him to wear golden insignia, and to deck with gold the trappings of his horse; and that he should generally be represented as wearing round his neck one of those massive gold chains, which he made the badge of notorious malefactors among his Utopians.'

² Robynson appears to have taken the Latin semel for simul.

polish them. And therewith they decke their yonge infantes. Which, like as in the first yeares of their childhood they make much and be fond and proud of such ornamentes, so when they be a litle more growen in yeares and discretion, perceiuing that none but children do were such toies and trifeles, they lay them awaye euen of theyre owne shamefastenes, wythowte annye bidding of there parentes: euen as oure chyldren, when they waxe bygge, doo caste awaye nuttes, brouches, and puppettes¹. Therefore thyes lawes and customes, which be so farre dyfferente from all othere natyons, howe diuers fanseys also and myndes they doo cause, dydde I neuer so playnlye perceauē, as in the Ambassadoures of the Anemolians².

Thyes Ambassadoures came to Amaurote whyles I was there. And bycause they came to entreat of greate and weighty matters, those .iii. citizeins a pece out of euery city³ were commen thether before them. But al the oblatos casu perpoliunt. His ornant infantulos, qui, ut primis pueritiae annis talibus ornamentis gloriantur ac superbiunt, sic, ubi plusculum accreuit aetatis, cum ieusmodi nugis

Gemmae puorum delitiae.

98 non nisi pueros | uti, nullo parentum animaduertunt monitu sed suomet ipsorum pudore deponunt; non aliter ac nostri pueri, quum grandescunt, nuces, bullas et pupas abiiciunt. Itaque haec tam diuersa ab reliquis gentibus instituta quam diuersas itidem animorum affectiones pariant, numquam aeque mihi atque in Anemoliorum legatis inclaruit.

Venerunt hi Amaurotum (dum ego aderam) et, quoniam magnis de rebus tractatum ueniebant, aduentum eorum terni illi ciues ex qualibet urbe praeuenerant.

Elegantissima fabula.

¹ 'Throwing away nuts,' for 'putting away childish things,' is rather a Latin proverb than an English one. The emperor Augustus, we are told, would play at nuts with little children (Sucton. in vita, c. 83). All three expressions may be illustrated from Persius:—

' . . . nucibus facimus quaecunque relictis' (Sat. j. 10).

' Bullaque succinctis Laribus donata pependit' (ib. v. 31).

' Nempe hoc quod Veneri donatae a uirgine pupae' (ib. ii. 70).

² An appropriate name, from ἀνεμός, 'the wind.' Compare Cicero's use of ventosus, where he calls Lepidus 'homo ventosissimus' (Epp. ad Fam. xi. 9).

³ See above, p. 119.

Ambassadours of the next contreis, which had bene there before, and knewe the fassions and maners of the Vtopians, amonge whome they perceaued no honoure geuen to sumptuous and costelye^a apparrell, silkes to be contemned, golde also to be enfamed and reproche-full, were wont to come thether in very homely and simple apparrell^b. But the Anemolianes, bicause they dwell farre thence, and had verye litle acquaintance with them, hearinge that they were al apparelled a like, and that verye rudelye and homelye, thynkyng them not to haue the thynges whyche they dydde not weare, beyng therefore more proud then wise, determined in the gorgiousnes of their apparel to represent very goddes, and wyth the bright shynynge and glisteringe of their gaye clothinge to dasell the eyes of the silie poore vtopains. So ther came in iii. Ambassadours with C. seruauntes all apparelled in changeable colours; the moost of them in silkes; the Ambassadours themselves (for at home in their owne cuntry they were noble men) in cloth of gold, with great cheines of gold, with ^a and costelye omitted.

^b araic.

sed omnes finitimarum gentium legati, qui eo ante appulerant, quibus Vtopiensium perspecti mores erant, apud quos sumptuoso uestitui nihil honoris haberi intelligebant, sericum contemptui esse, aurum etiam infame sciebant, cultu quam poterant modestissimo uenire consueuerant. At Anemolii, quod longius aberant, ac minus cum illis commercii habuerant, quum accepissent eodem omnes eoque rudi corporis cultu esse, persuasi¹ non habere eos quo non utebantur, ipsi etiam superbi magis quam sapientes decreuerunt apparatus elegantia deos quosdam repraesentare, et miserorum oculos Vtopiensium ornatus sui splendore praestringere. Itaque ingressi sunt legati tres, cum comitibus centum, omnes uestitu uersicolori, plerique serico, legati ipsi (nam domi nobiles erant) amictu aureo, magnis torquibus, et

¹ This personal construction of persuasus, as if the verb governed an accusative in the active, is found in Ovid and Phædrus. Valla, while discussing the nice distinctions of suadere and persuadere, seems to allow it: 'Qui persuasus est, plane acquiescit.' Elegant. (1529), leaf 149 vers.

gold hanging at their eares, with gold ringes vpon their fingers, with brouches and aglettes of gold vpon their cappes, which glistered ful of peerles and pretious stones; to be short, trimmed and aduorned with al those thinges, which emong the vtopians were other the punnishment of bondmen, or the reproche of infamed persones, or elles trifels for yonge children to playe with all. Therefore it wolde haue done a man good at his harte to haue sene howe proudelye they displayed their pecockes fethers; howe muche they made of their paynted sheathes; and howe loftely they sett forth and aduanced them selves¹, when they compared their gallaunte apparrell with the poore rayment of the vtopians. For al the people were swarmed furth into the stretes. And on the other side it was no lesse pleasure to consider howe muche they were deceaued, and how farre they missed of their purpose; being contrary wayes taken then they thought they shoulde haue bene. For to the iyes of all the vtopians, excepte very fewe, whiche had bene in other contreys for some resonable cause, al that gorgeousnes of apparel semed shamefull and reprochfull; in so inauribus aureis, ad haec anulis aureis in manibus, monilibus insuper 99 pensis in pileo, quae margaritis ac gemmis affulgebant: omnibus postremo rebus ornati, quae apud Vtopienses aut seruorum supplicia, aut infamium dedecora, aut puerorum nugamenta fuere. Itaque operae precium erat uidere quo pacto cristas erexerint, ubi suum ornatum cum Vtopiensium uestitu (nam in plateis sese populus effuderat) contulere. contraque non minus erat uoluptatis consyderare quam longe sua eos spes expectatioque fefellerat, quamque longe ab ea existimatione aberant, quam se consecuturos putauerant. Nempe Vtopiensium oculis omnium, exceptis perquam^a paucis, qui alias gentes aliqua idonea de causa inuiserant, totus ille splendor apparatus pudendus uidebatur, et infimum quenque pro dominis reuerenter

^a praeterquam, A.

¹ It will be noticed how Robynson in the Latin 'quo pacto cristas erexerint.' has here amplified the single phrase much that they most reuerently saluted the vylest and most abiect of them for lordes; passing ouer the Ambassadors themselves without any honour; iudging them, be their wearing of golden cheynes, to be bondemen. Yea, you shuld haue sene children also that had caste away their peerles and pretious stones, when they sawe the like sticking vpon the Ambassadors cappes, digge and pushe their mothers vnder the sides, sayinge thus to them: 'Loke, mother, how great a lubbor doth yet were peerles and pretious stoones, as though he were a litel child still¹.' But the mother, yea, and that also in good earnest: 'peace, sone,' saith she; 'I thynk he be some of the Ambassadors fooles.' Some fownde fawte at theire golden cheynes, as to no vse nor purpose; beyng so small and weake, that a bondeman myghte easelye breake them; and agayne so wyde and large, that, when it pleased him, he myght cast them of, and runne awaye at lybertye whether he wolde.

But when the Ambassadors hadde bene there a daye or .ii., and sawe so greate abundaunce of gold so lyghtelye estymed, yea, in no lesse reproche then yt was wyth them salutantes, legatos ipsos, ex aurearum usu catenarum pro seruis habitos, sine ullo prorsus honore praetermiserunt. Quin pueros quoque uidisses, qui gemmas ac margaritas abiecerant, ubi in legatorum pileis

ᾧ τεχνίτην.^a affixas conspexerunt, compellare matrem ac latus fodere: En, mater, quam magnus nebulo margaritis adhuc et gemmulis utitur, ac si esset puerulus! At parens serio etiam illa, Tace, inquit, fili; est, opinor, quispiam e morionibus legatorum. Alii catenas illas aureas reprehendere, utpote nullius usus, quippe tam graciles ut eas facile seruus infringere, tam laxas rursus uti quum fuerit libitum possit excutere, et solutus ac liber quouis aufugere.

Verum legati postquam ibi unum atque alterum diem uersati tantam auri uim in tanta uilitate conspexerunt, nec in | minore contumelia 100

^a ο τεχνίτην, A. Idem quoque B., sed nulla accentus nota.

¹ The marginal annotator, whether it be Erasmus or Peter Giles, has deservedly called attention to the artistic effect of this touch.

in honour ; and, besydes that, more golde in the cheynes and gyues of one fugytyue bondeman, then all the costelye ornamentes of them .iii. was worth ; they beganne to abate theyre currage, and for verye shame layde awaye all that gorgyouse arraye wherof theye were so prowde ; and specyallye when they hadde talkede famylyerlye wyth the Vtopyans, and hadde learnede all theyre fassyons and opynions. For they marueyle that annye men be soo folyshe as to haue delyte and pleasure in the^a glysterynge of a lytyll tryfelynge stone, whyche maye beholde annye of the starres, or elles the soone yt selfe ; or that annye man ys so madde as to counte him selfe the nobler for the smaller or fyner threde of wolle, whyche selfe same woll (be it nowe in neuere so fyne a sponne threde) dyde ones a shepe weare^b ; and yet was she all that time no other thing than a shepe¹.

They marueyle also that golde, whyche of the owne nature is a thyng so vnprofytable, is nowe emonge all quam apud se honore habitam uidissent ; ad haec in unius fugitiui serui catenas compedesque plus auri atque argenti congestum quam totus ipsorum trium apparatus constiterat, subsidentibus pennis omnem illum cultum, quo sese tam arroganter extulerant, pudefacti seposuerunt : maxime uero postquam familiarius cum Vtopiensibus collocuti mores eorum atque opiniones didicere.

^a the doubtful.

^b a shepe dyde ones.

Mirantur ille siquidem quenquam esse mortalium quem exiguae gemmulae aut lapilli dubius oblectet fulgor, cui quidem stellam aliquam atque ipsum denique solem liceat^a intueri ; aut quenquam tam insanum esse, ut nobilior ipse sibi ob tenuioris lanae filum uideatur ; siquidem hanc ipsam (quantumuis tenui filo sit) ouis olim gestauit, nec aliud tamen interim quam ouis fuit.

Dubius dixit,
ob gemmas
factitias, aut certe dubium dixit exiguum ac malignum.

Mirantur item aurum suapte natura tam inutile nunc ubique gen-

^a om. A.

¹ An anticipation of the familiar lines of Dr. Watts :

'When the poor sheep and silkworm wore That very clothing long before.'

people in soo hyghe estymatyon, that man hym selfe, by whom, yea and for the vse of whome, yt ys so muche sett by, ys in muche lesse estymatyon then the golde yt selfe. In so muche that a lumpyshe blockehedded churle¹, and whyche hathe no more wytte then an asse, yea, and as full of noughtenes and folyshenes^a, shall haue neuertheles many wyse and good men in subiectyon and bondage, onlye for thys, bycause he hathe a greate heape of golde. Whyche yf yt should be taken from hyme by annye fortune, or by some subtyll wyle^b of the lawe, (which no lesse then fortune doth raise vp the lowe, and plucke downe the high) and be geuen to the most vile slaue and abiect dreuell of all his housholde, then shortely after he shall goo into the seruice of his seruaunt, as an augmentation or an^c ouerplus besyd his money. But they much more marueill at and detest the madenes of them, whyche to those riche men, in whose debte and daunger² they be not, do giue almoste diuine honowres,

^a noughtenes as of follye.^b wyle and cautele.^c nor³.

tium aestimari tanti, ut homo ipse per quem atque adeo in cuius usum id precii obtinuit, minoris multo quam aurum ipsum aestimetur; usque adeo ut plumbeus quispiam, et cui non plus ingenii sit quam stipiti, nec minus etiam improbus quam stultus, multos tamen et sapientes et bonos uiros in seruitute habeat, ob id duntaxat, quod ei magnus contigit aureorum numismatum cumulus; quem si qua fortuna aut aliqua legum strophæ (quæ nihil minus ac fortuna ipsa summis ima permiscet) ab hero illo ad abiectissimum totius familiae suæ nebulonem transtulerit, fit nimirum paulo post ut in famuli sui famulicium concedat, uelut appendix additamentumque numismatum. Caeterum multo magis eorum mirantur ac detestantur insaniam, qui diuitibus illis quibus neque debent quicquam, neque sunt obnoxii, nullo alio respectu, that is, under obligation to him.

¹ Burnet, more literally, but not idiomatically, 'a Man of Lead.'² Compare the Merchant of Venice, iv. 1, 'You stand within his danger, do you not?'

³ The reading of the second edition, 'nor' for 'or an,' may have been caused by joining the n of the preceding word to 'or.'

for non other consideration, but because they be riche; and yet knowing them to be suche nigeshe penny fathers¹, that they be sure, as long as they liue, not the worthe of one farthinge of that heape of gold shall come to them.

Thies and such like opinions haue they conceaued, partely by education, beinge brought vp in that common wealth, whose lawes and customes be farre different from thies kindes of folly, and partely by good litterature and learning. For though ther be not many in euery citey, whiche be exempte and discharged of all other laboures, and appointed only to learninge; that is to saye, suche in whome euen from their very childhode they haue perceaued a singuler towardnes, a fyne witte, and a minde apte to good learning; yet all in their childhode be instructe in learninge. And the better parte of the people, bothe men and women, throughe owte all their hole lyffe, doo bestowe in learninge those spare howres, which we sayde they haue vacante from bodelye laboures². They be taughte learninge in their owne quam quod diuites sunt, honores tantum non diuinos impendunt, idque cum eos tam sordidos atque auaros cognoscunt, ut habeant certo certius ex tanto nummorum cumulo, uiuentibus illis, ne unum quidem nummulum unquam ad se uenturum.

Quanto plus sapiunt Vtopiani
quam Christianorum uulgus.

Has atque huiusmodi opiniones partim ex educatione conceperunt, in ea educti Republica, cuius instituta longissime ab his stultitiae generibus absunt; partim ex doctrina et literis. Nam et si haud multi cuiusque urbis sunt, qui caeteris exonerati laboribus soli disciplinae deputantur, hii uidelicet in quibus a pueritia egregiam indolem, eximium ingenium, atque animum ad bonas artes propensum, deprehendere, tamen omnes pueri literis imbuuntur; et populi bona pars, uiri faeminaeque, per totam uitam, horas illas quas ab operibus liberis diximus, in literis collocant. Disciplinas ipsorum lingua

¹ Niggardly misers. See the Glossary.

² See above, p. 143. In this 'vacancy

from bodily labours' lies the original idea of 'school.'

natyue tonge. For yt is bothe copious in woordes, and also pleasaunte to the eare, and for the vtterance of a mans minde verye perfecte and sure¹. The mooste parte of all that syde of the wordle² vseth the same langage; sauinge that amonge the Vtopians yt is fyneste and puryste; and accordynge to the dyuersytye of the contreys yt ys dyuerslye alterede.

Of all thyes Philosophers, whose names be here famous in thys parte of the wordle to vs knowen, before owre cummynge thether, nott as muche as the fame of annye of them was comen amonge them; and yett in Musycke, Logycke, Arythmetyke, and Geometrye, they haue fownde owte in a manner all that oure auncyente Philosophers haue tawghte. But as they in all thynges be almoste equall to our olde auncyente clerkes, so our newe Logiciens perdiscunt. est enim neque uerborum inops, nec insuauis auditu, Studia et nec ulla fidelior animi interpres est. eadem fere (nisi disciplinae quod ubique corruptior, alibi aliter) magnam eius orbis Vtopiensium. plagam peruagatur.

 Ex omnibus his philosophis, quorum nomina sunt in hoc noto nobis orbe celebria, ante nostrum aduentum ne fama quidem cuiusquam eo peruenerat, et tamen in musica Musica, dialecticaque, ac numerandi et metiendi scientia 102
 Dialectica,
 Arithmetica. eadem fere quae nostri illi ueteres inuenere. Caeterum ut antiquos omnibus prope rebus exaequant, ita nuperorum

¹ Was More thinking of the yet undeveloped capacity of his own mother tongue, when he wrote this? It should not, at any rate, be forgotten what great services he rendered to his native English speech. He was, as Sir James Mackintosh said, 'the first person in our history distinguished by the faculty of public speaking;' and he was also distinguished 'as our earliest prose writer, and as the first Englishman who wrote the history of his country in the present language.'—Life of More,

1831, p. 19. The English tongue in More's day, 'rough, confused, unmetrical, the tongue of business and the vulgar, was, in the lips of the educated, a condescension to vulgar ignorance and infirmity.'—See English Studies, by the late Professor Brewer, 1881, p. 226. More's friends, Colet and Lily, at the time when he wrote, were also 'teaching learning in their own native tongue.'

² The same transposition of letters is left in the second edition.

in subtyll inuentyons haue farre passed and gone beyonde them¹. For they haue not deuysed one of all those rules of restryctyons, amplyfycatyons, and supposytyons, very wittelye inuented in the small Logycalles², whyche heare oure chyldren in euerye place do learne. Furthermore they were neuer yet able to fynde out the seconde intentyons³; in so muche that none of them all coulde euer see inuentis dialecticorum longe sunt impares. Nam ne ullam quidem regulam inuenerunt earum, quas de restrictionibus, amplificationibus, ac suppositionibus acutissime excogitatis in paruis logicalibus passim hic ediscunt pueri.

Apparet hoc loco subesse nasum.

Porro secundas intentiones tam longe abest ut inuestigare suffecerint,

¹ The marginal note gives a hint of the irony that is coming.

² The name of 'Parua Logicalia' (so called, More says laughingly in his letter to Dorp, because they have little logic in them) was given to the last treatise in the Summulæ of Petrus Hispanus (Spanheim), afterwards Pope John XXI. He died in 1277. According to Mansel, his Summulæ Logicales may be regarded as 'the earliest scholastic treatise on Logic which professes to be anything more than an abridgement of, or commentary on, portions of the Organon.' The last treatise of the work, according to the same writer, 'contains sundry additions to the text of Aristotle, in the form of dissertations on suppositio, ampliatio, restrictio, exponible propositions, and other subtleties, more ingenious than useful, and belonging rather to Grammar than to Logic.' There are frequent allusions to the Parua Logicalia in the Epistolæ Obscurorum Virorum (ed. 1557, leaf A 9 of the Concil. Theolog., &c.), and the subject is not forgotten in the Encomium Moriae (ed. 1668, p. 182). It is amusing to find Listrius, who joined in the laugh with Erasmus at these 'plusquam scholasticas nugæ,' preparing an edition of the Summulæ, which appeared in 1520. See Gesner's Bibliotheca, 1545, leaf 274 vers., and Mansel's Artis Logicae Rudimenta, 1852, p. xxxiii.

³ Of this really important conception in logic, which formed a chief subject of dispute between the Thomists and Scotists, Mr. Mullinger gives a clear account in his University of Cambridge, i. p. 181: 'The intellect, as it directs itself (intendens se) towards external objects, discerns, for example, Socrates in his pure individuality, and the impression thus received is to be distinguished as the intentio prima. But when the existence of Socrates has thus been apprehended, the reflective faculty comes into play; Socrates, by a secondary process, is recognized as a philosopher or as an animal; he is assigned to genus and species. The conception thus formed constitutes the intentio secunda. But the intentio secunda exists only in relation to the human intellect, and hence cannot be ranked among real existences; while the objects of the external world, and Universals which have their existence in the Divine mind, would exist even if man were not.'

man hymselfe in commen, as they call hym¹; thoughe he be (as yow knowe) bygger then euer was annye gyaunte, yea, and poynted to of vs euen wyth our fynger. But they be in the course of the starres, and the mouynges of the heauenlye spheres, verry expert and cunnyng². They haue also wyttelye excogytated and diuised instrumentes of diuers fassyons, wherin is exactly comprehended and conteyned the mouynges and sytuatyons of the sonne, the moone, and of all the other starres which appere in theyre horyzon. But as for the amityes and dissentions of the planettes, and all that deceytfull diuynatyon by the starres³, they neuer asmuch as dreamed therof. Raynes, windes, and other courses of tempestes they knowe before ut nec hominem ipsum in communi, quem uocant, quanquam (ut scitis) plane colosseum et quouis gigante maiorem, tum a nobis praeterea digito demonstratum, nemo tamen eorum uidere potuerit. At sunt in astrorum cursu, et caelestium orbium motu, peritissimi. Quin instrumenta quoque diuersis figuris solerter excogitarunt, quibus solis ac lunae, et caeterorum item astrorum, quae in ipsorum horizonte uisuntur, motiones ac situs exactissime comprehensos habent. Caeterum amicitias, atque errantium dissidia syderum, ac totam denique illam ex astris diuinandi imposturam, ne somniant quidem. Imbres, uentos, ac caeteras tempestatum uicissitudines signis

¹ That is, man in the abstract. For the subject of Universals, in dispute between the Realists and Nominalists, see Hampden's Scholastic Philosophy, 1833, p. 71, and the passages from Prantl, quoted by Mullinger, as above, pp. 182, 183.

² This was in accordance with More's own tastes. 'If an astronomer came in his way,' says Seebohm, quoting Stapleton, 'he would get him to stay awhile in his house, to teach them all about the stars and planets.' Oxford Ref., 1869, p. 500.

³ 'No class of men,' writes the author of Philomorus, 'came more frequently under the lash than the pretenders to astrology. Many years ago More had exposed their notorious failure in his elegy upon the death of Elizabeth of York, who died in the very year in which they had predicted for her all manner of prosperity:—

'Yet was I lately promised otherwise,

This year to live in welthe and delice.'

See the Philomorus, ed. 1878, pp. 233 sqq., where translations are given of some of More's epigrams in astrologos.

by certein tokens, which they haue learned by long vse and obseruation¹. But of the causes of all thies thinges, of the ebbinge, flowinge, and saltenes of the sea, and fynallye of the orygynall begynnyng and nature of heauen and of the wordle, they holde partelye the same opynyons that our olde philosophers holde; and partelye, as our philosophers varye emonge themselves, so they also, whiles they bringe new reasons of thynges, doo disagree from all them, and yet emonge themselves in all poyntes they doo not accorde.

In that part of philosophie which intreateth of manners and vertue², their reasons and opynyons agree wyth ours. They dyspute of the good qualytyes of the sowle, of the body, and of fortune; and whether the name of goodnes³ maye be applied to all thies, or onlie to the endowmentes and giftes of the sowle. Their reason of vertue and pleasure. But the chiefe and principall question is in what thyng, be yt one or moo, the felycytye of man consisteth. But in thys poynte theye seme almooste to quibusdam longo perspectis usu praesentiant. Sed de causis earum rerum omnium, et de fluxu maris eiusque salsitate, et in summa de caeli mundique origine ac natura, partim eadem que ueteres philosophi nostri disserunt, partim, ut illi inter se dissident, ita hi quoque, dum nouas rerum rationes afferunt, ab omnibus illis dissentiunt, nec inter se tamen usque quaque conueniunt.

Physica omnium incertissima.

In ea philosophiae parte qua de moribus agitur, eadem illis disputantur quae nobis. de bonis animi quaerunt et corporis, et externis, tum utrum boni nomen omnibus his, an solis animi dotibus conueniat. De uirtute disserunt ac uoluptate; sed omnium prima est ac princeps controuersia, qua nam in re, una pluribusue sitam hominis felicitatem putent. At hac in re propensiores aequo

Ethica.

Ordo bonorum.

Fines bonorum.

Vtopiani felicitatem honestam

¹ Compare what was said of the City of the Sun, above, p. lvii.

² Ethics, or moral philosophy.

³ The marginal note 'Fines bono-rum' points the reference to Cicero's treatise. In what follows, frequent references to the De Finibus will appear.

muche geuen and enclnyed to the opinion of them whiche defende pleasure; wherin they determine other all or the chiefyste parte of mans felycytye to reste¹. And (whyche is more to bee marueled at) the defence of thys soo deyntye and delycate an opynyon they fetche euen from theyre² graue, sharpe, bytter, and rygorous relygyon. For they neuer dyspute of felycytye or blessednes, but they ioyne to the reasons of Philosophye certeyne pryncples taken owte of relygyon; wythoute the whyche, to the inuestygatyon of trewe felycytye, theye thynke reason of yt selfe weak and vnperfecte. Thoose pryncples be thyes and suche lyke: That the sowle ys immortall, and by the bountifull goodnes of God ordeyned to felicitie: That to our vertues and good deades rewardes be apoynted after this lyfe, and to our euell deades punyshementes. Though thies be uoluptate

metiuntur.
Principia philo-sophiae e religione petenda.
Theologia
Vtopiensium.
Animorum im-mortalitas, de qua hodie non pauci etiam Christianorum
disputant.^b

uidentur in factionem uoluptatis assertricem, ut qua uel totam, uel potissimam felicitatis humanae partem definiant. Et quo magis mireris, ab religione quoque (quae grauis et seuera est fereque tristis et rigida) petunt tamen sententiae tam delicatae patrocinium. Neque enim de felicitate disceptant unquam, quin principia quaedam ex religione deprompta tum^a philosophia quae rationibus utitur, coniungant; sine quibus ad uerae felicitatis inuestigationem mancam atque imbecillam per se rationem putant. Ea principia sunt huiusmodi: animam esse immortalem, ac dei beneficentia ad felicitatem natam: uirtutibus ac benefactis nostris praemia post hanc uitam, flagitiis destinata supplicia. Haec tametsi

^a Legend. cum.

^b Christiani dubitant, B.

¹ This making the people of Utopia to be Epicureans in philosophy is in accordance with what Vesputius had written of some of his newly-discovered tribes:—'Quid ultra dicam? viuunt secundum naturam, et epycuri potius dici possunt quam stoici.'—See the Mundus nouus, before quoted, fol. 3 verso.

² The insertion of this word spoils

the sense. The religion of the Utopians was not 'sharpe, bytter and rygorous.' Burnet's rendering is better: 'and, what may seem more strange, they make use of arguments even from religion, notwithstanding its severity and roughness, for the support of that opinion, so indulgent to pleasure.'

pertheynyng to religion, yet they thynke it mete that they shoulde be beleued and graunted by profes of reason. But if thies principles were condempned and dysanulled, then without anye delaye they pronounce no man to be so folish, whiche woulde not do all hys diligence and endeouure to obteyne pleasure be ryght or wronge, onlye auoydyng this inconuenience, that the lesse pleasure should not be a let or hynderaunce to the bygger ; or that he laboured not for that pleasure whiche would bryng after it displeasure, greefe, and sorrowe¹. For they iudge it extreame madnes to folowe sharpe and painful vertue, and not only to bannyshe the pleasure of lyfe, but also wyllyngly to suffre grief without any hope of proffyt thereof^a. For what proffyt can there be, if a man, when he hath passed ouer all hys lyfe vnpleasauntly, that is to say, wretchedlye^b, shall haue no rewarde after hys death ?

^a therof ensuinge.

^b miserablye.

religionis sint, ratione tamen censent ad ea credenda et concedenda perduci ; quibus e medio sublatis, sine ulla cunctatione pronunciant neminem esse tam stupidum, qui non sentiat petendam sibi per fas ac nefas uoluptatem ; hoc tantum caueret ne minor uoluptas obstet maiori, aut eam persequatur, quam inuicem retaliet² dolor. Nam uirtutem asperam ac difficilem sequi, ac non abigere modo suauitatem uitae, sed dolorem etiam sponte perpeti, cuius nullum expectes fructum (quis enim potest esse fructus si

Vt non quaeuis^a expetenda uoluptas, ita nec dolor affectandus, nisi uirtutis causa.

104 post | mortem nihil assequeris, quum hanc uitam totam insuauiter, hoc est, misere traduxeris) id uero dementissimum ferunt. Nunc

^a quiuis, B. prave.

¹ Epicurus himself taught the necessity of this temperance in the enjoyment of pleasure. It was a boast of his, Seneca tells us, that he could dine for less than an as, while it cost Metrodorus the whole of that sum (about three farthings) for his dinner. The peculiar pleasure of the feat lay in the consciousness of being able to dispense with what lower natures found necessary to enjoyment. ' Non enim iucunda res est aqua et polenta, aut frustum hordacei panis ; sed summa uoluptas est, posse capere ex his uoluptatem, et ad id se reduxisse, quod eripere nulla fortunae iniquitas possit.' Seneca, Epist. xviii.

² A post-classical word, found in Aulus Gellius.

But now, syr, they thynke not felicitie to reste in all pleasure, but onely in that pleasure that is good and honest; and that hereto, as to perfet blessednes, our nature is allured and drawen euen of vertue; wherto only they that be of the contrary opinion do attribute felicitie. For they define vertue to be a^a life ordered according to nature¹; and that we be hereunto ordeined of god; and that he doth followe the course of nature, which in desiering and refusing thynge is ruled by reason. Furthermore, that reason doth chiefelie and pryncipallye kendle in men the loue and veneration of the deuyne maiestie; of whoes goodnes it is that we be, and that we be impossibilitie^b to attayne felicitie. And that, secondarely, it moueth and prouoketh vs to leade our lyfe out of care² in ioye and myrth, and to helpe all other^c, in respecte of the sositie

^a a omitted.

^b in possibilitie (printed as one word).

^c [and . . . other] and also moueth us to helpe and further all other.

uero non in omni uoluptate felicitatem, sed in bona atque honesta sitam putant. ad eam enim, uelut ad summum bonum, naturam nostram ab ipsa uirtute pertrahi, cui sola aduersa factio felicitatem tribuit.

Hoc iuxta Stoicos.

Nempe uirtutem definiunt, secundum naturam uiuere; ad id siquidem a deo institutos esse nos. Eum uero naturae ductum sequi, quisquis in appetendis fugiendis-que rebus obtemperat rationi. Rationem porro mortales primum omnium in amorem ac uenerationem diuinae maiestatis incendere, cui debemus et quod sumus, et quod compotes esse felicitatis possumus. secundum id commonet atque excitat nos ut uitam quam licet minime anxiam ac maxime laetam ducamus ipsi, caeterisque omnibus ad idem obtinendum adiutores nos pro naturae societate praebeamus.

¹ This is the Stoical definition of virtue. 'Natura enim duce uiuendum est,' wrote Seneca; 'idem est ergo beate uiuere et secundum naturam' (De Vita beata, c. viii). Lipsius, in his Manuductio ad Stoicam Philosophiam (ed. 1644), p. 177, quotes a number of passages to the same effect. Mr. J. A. St. John, who refers to this passage of Lipsius in his commentary on the Utopia, adds: 'The only difficulty appears to be to determine what it is to live according to nature; for I imagine that every man will be sure to conceive that nature sanctions what he thinks right.'

² Lat. quam . . . minime anxiam, 'as little careful as may be,' in the old sense of careful (Phil. iv. 6).

of nature, to obteyne^a the same. For there was neuer man so earnest and paynefull a follower of vertue, and hater of pleasure, that woulde so inioyne you laboures, watchinges, and fastinges¹, but he would also exhort you to ease and lighten to^b your powre the lacke and myserye of others; praysyng the same as a dede of humanitie and pitie. Then if it be² a poynte of humanitie for man to bryng health and comforte to man, and speciallye (whiche is a vertue moste peculiarlye belongyng to man) to mitigate and assuage the grief of others, and by takyng from them the sorowe and heuynes of lyfe, to restore them to ioye, that is to saye to pleasure; whye maye it not then be sayd that nature doth prouoke euerye man to doo the same to hymselfe?

For a ioyfull lyfe, that is to saye, a pleasaunt lyfe, is other euell; and if it be so, then thou shouldest not onlye helpe no man therto, but rather, as muche as in the lieth, helpe^c all men from it, as noysome and hurtefull; or els, if thou not onlye mayste, but also of dewtie art bounde to ^a obteyne and enjoye. ^b ease, lighten and relieue to. ^c withdrawe.

Neque enim quisquam unquam fuit tam tristis ac rigidus assecla uirtutis, et osor uoluptatis, qui ita labores, uigilias et squalores indicat tibi, ut non idem aliorum inopiam atque incommoda leuare te pro tua uirili iubeat, et id laudandum humanitatis nomine censeat, hominem homini saluti ac solatio esse, si humanum est maxime (qua uirtute nulla est homini magis propria) aliorum mitigare molestiam, et sublata tristitia uitae iucunditati, hoc est uoluptati reddere. Quid ni natura quenquam instiget et sibimet idem praestet?

105 Nam | aut mala est uita iucunda, id est, uoluptaria, quod si est, non solum neminem ad eam debes adiutare, sed omnibus utpote noxiam ac mortiferam quantum potes adimere; aut, si conciliare aliis eam, ut bonam, non licet modo,

At nunc quidam accersunt dolores, uelut in his sita

¹ There is an allusion in the English, arrangement of the Latin sentences but not in the Latin, to 2 Cor. vi. 5. from that in the text. He places a

² It will be seen that Robynson, full stop after censeat, and only a perhaps rightly, makes a different comma after reddere.

procure it to others, why not chiefly to the self, to whome thou art bound to shewe as muche fauour^a as to other? For when natur biddeth the to be good and gentle to other, she commaundeth the not to be cruell and vngentle to the selfe. Therefore euen very nature¹ (saye they) prescribeth to vs a ioyfull lyfe, that is to saye, pleasure, as the ende of all our operations. And they defyne vertue to be lyfe ordered accordyng to the prescript of nature². But in that that nature dothe allure and prouoke men one to healpe an other to lyue merilye (whiche suerlye she doth not³ without a good cause; for no man is so farre aboute the lot of mans state or condicion, that nature doth carke and care for hym only, whiche equallye fauoureth all that be comprehended vnder the communion of one shape, forme, and fassion), verely she commaundeth the to vse diligent circumspection, that thou do not so seke for / thine owne commodities, that thou procure others incommodities.

^a fauour and gentelnes.

sit religio; cum ferendi potius sint si incidant, ad pietatis officium tendenti, aut naturae necessitate accidant.

set etiam debes, cur non tibi in primis ipsi? cui non minus propitium esse te quam aliis decet. neque enim quum te natura moneat uti in alios bonus sis, eadem te rursus iubet in temet saeuum atque inclementem esse. Vitam ergo iucundam, inquit, id est uoluptatem, tanquam operationum omnium finem, ipsa nobis natura praescribit; ex cuius praescripto uiuere uirtutem definiunt. At quum natura mortales inuitet ad hilarioris uitae mutuuum subsidium (quod certe merito facit: neque enim tam supra generis humani sortem quisquam est, ut solus naturae curae sit, quae uniuersos ex aequo fouet, quos eiusdem formae communiōe complectitur) eadem te nimirum iubet etiam atque etiam obseruare, ne sic tuis commodis obsecundes, ut aliorum procure's incommoda.

¹ 'Omne animal, simulatque natum sit, voluptatem appetere, eaque gaudere, ut summo bono; dolorem aspernari, ut summum malum, et, quantum possit, a se repellere: idque facere

nondum deprauatum, ipsa natura incorrupte atque integre iudicante.' Cic. De Fin. I. ix 30.

² See above, p. 190.

³ Join 'not without.'

Wherefore their opinion is, that not onely couenauntes and bargaynes made amonge priuate men ought to be well and faythfullye fulfilled, obserued, and kept, but also commen lawes; whiche other a good prince hath iustlye publyshed, or els the people, nother oppressed with tyranny, nother deceaued by fraude and gyell, hath by their common consent constitute and ratified, concernyng the particion of the commodities of lyfe,—that is to say, the matter¹ of pleasure. Thies lawes not offendid, it is wysdome that thou looke to thyne own wealthe. And to do the same for the common wealthe is no lesse then thy duetie, if thou bearest any reuerent loue or any naturall zeale and affection to thy natiue contrey. But to go about to let an other man of his pleasure, whiles thou procurest thyne owne, that is open wrong. Contrary wyse, to withdrawe somethynge from they selfe to geue to other, that is a pointe of humanitie and gentylnes; whiche neuer taketh a waye so muche commoditie, as it bryngeth agayne. For it is recompensed with the retourne of benefytes; and the conscience of the good dede, with the remembrance of the thankefull loue and beneuolence of them

Seruanda igitur censent non inita solum inter priuatos pacta, sed publicas etiam leges, quas aut bonus princeps iuste promulgauit, aut populus, nec oppressus^a tyrannide, nec dolo circumscriptus, de partiendis uitae commodis, hoc est materia uoluptatis, communi consensu sanxit. Hiis inoffensis legibus tuum curare commodum, prudentia^b est; publicum praeterea, pietatis. Sed alienam uoluptatem praereptum ire, dum consequare tuam, id demum est humanitatis ac benignitatis officium, quod ipsum nunquam tantum aufert commodi quantum refert. Nam et beneficiorum uicissitudine pensatur, et ipsa benefacti conscientia, ac recordatio charitatis eorum et beneuolentiae quibus benefeceris, plus uoluptatis affert animo, quam fuisset

Pacta et leges.

Officia uitae
mutua.

^a om. A.

^b Legend. prudentiæ.

¹ That is, the material.

to whom thou hast done it, doth brynge more pleasure to thy mynde, then that whiche thou hast withholden from thy selfe could haue brought to the^a bodye. Finallye (which to a godly disposed and a religious mind is easie to be persuaded), God recompenseth the gifte of a short and small pleasure with great and euerlastinge ioye. Therefore, the matter diligentlie wayde and considered, thus they thinke: that all our actions, and in them the vertues themselves, be referred at the last to pleasure, as their ende and felicitie.

Pleasure they call euery motion and state of the bodie or mynde, wherin man hath naturally delectation. Appetite they ioyne to nature¹, and that not without a good cause. For like as not only the senses, but also right reason, coueteth whatsoeuer is naturally pleasaunt; so that it^b may be gotten without wrong or iniurie, not letting or debarring a greater pleasur, nor causing painful labour; euen so those thinges that men by vaine ymagination, do illa corporis qua abstinuisti. Postremo (quod facile persuadet animo libenter assentienti religio) breuis et exiguae uoluptatis uicem ingenti ac nunquam interituro gaudio rependit deus. Itaque hoc pacto censent, et excussa sedulo et perpensa re, omnes actiones nostras, atque in his uirtutes etiam ipsas, uoluptatem tandem, uelut finem felicitatemque, respicere.

^a thy.

^b for it.

Voluptatem appellant omnem corporis animiue motum statumque, in quo uersari natura duce delectet. Appetitionem Voluptas quid. naturae non temere addunt. Nam ut quicquid natura iucundum est, ad quod neque per iniuriam tenditur, nec iucundius aliud amittitur, nec labor succedit, non sensus modo sed recta quoque ratio persequitur; ita quae praeter naturam dulcia sibi mor-

¹ The sense of the original is here somewhat obscured. More had given the Utopian definition of pleasure as 'every motion or state of body or mind, in which Nature teaches us to find delight.' It is an essential part of this definition that Nature should be the guide. Hence 'they add, with good reason, the appetite (or inclination) of Nature,' without which many things might be taken for pleasures, which were not really so. If this view be right, naturae is genitive, not dative.

fayne against nature to be pleasaunt (as though it lay in their powre to chaunge the thinges as they do the names of thinges), al suche pleasurs they beleue to be of so small helpe and furtheraunce to felicitie, that they counte them great^a let and hinderaunce; because that, in whom they haue ones taken place, all his mynde they possesse with a false opinion of pleasure; so that there is no place left for true and naturall delectacions. For there be manye thynges, whiche of their owne nature conteyne no pleasauntnes; yea the moste part of them muche grief and sorrow; and yet, through the peruerse and malicious flickering inticementes of lewde and vnhoneste desyres, be taken not only for speciall and souereigne pleasures, but also be counted amonge the chiefe causes of life.

In this counterfeate kinde of pleasure they put them that I speake of before; which, the better gown they haue on, the better men they thynke them selves. In the whiche thyng they doo twyse erre. For they be no lesse deceaued in that they thynke their gowne the better, than they be in that they thinke themselves the better. For if ^a a great.

tales uanissima conspiratione confingunt (tanquam in ipsis esset perinde res ac uocabula commutare) ea omnia statuunt adeo nihil ad felicitatem facere, ut plurimum efficiant etiam, uel eo quod quibus semel insederunt, ne ueris ac genuinis oblectamentis usquam uacet locus, totum prorsus animum falsa uoluptatis opinione praeoccupant. Sunt enim perquam multa, quae quum 107 suapte natura nihil contineant suauitatis, imo bona pars amaritudinis etiam plurimum, peruersa tum^a improbarum cupiditatum illecebra, non pro summis tantum uoluptatibus habeantur, uerum etiam inter praecipuas uitae causas numerentur.

Falsae uoluptates.

In hoc adulterinae uoluptatis genere eos collocant, quos ante memorauimus, qui quo meliorem togam habent, eo sibi meliores ipsi uidentur: qua una in re bis errant. Neque enim minus falsi sunt, quod meliorem putant togam suam, quam quod se. Cur enim si uestis usum spectes, tenuioris filii

Error eorum qui sibi ob cultum placent.

^a Fortasse legend. tamen.

yow consider the profitable vse of the garmente, whye shoulde wulle of a fyner sponne threde be thought^a better, then the wul of a course sponne threde¹? Yet they, as though the one dyd passe the other by nature, and not by their mistakyng, auauance themselves and thinke the price of their owne persones therby greatly encreased. And therefore the honoure, whiche in a course gowne they durste not haue lokyd for, they require as it were of dewtie for their fyner gownes sake. And if they be passed by without reuerence, they take it angerlye^b and disdaynfully.

And agayne is it not a^c lyke madnes to take a pride in vayne and vnprofitable honoures? For what naturall or trewe pleasure doest thou take of an other mans bare hede or bowed knees? Will thys ease the payne of thy knees, or remedye the phrensie of thy heade? In this ymage of counterfeyte pleasure, they be of a maruelous madnes, which for the opinion of nobilitie² reioyse muche in their owne conceite, because it was their fortune to come of suche auncetours, whoes stocke of longe tyme lana praestet crassiori? at illi tamen, tanquam natura non errore praecellerent, attollunt cristas, et sibimet quoque precii credunt inde non nihil accedere; eoque honorem, quem uilius uestiti sperare non essent ausi, elegantiori togae uelut suo iure exigunt, et praetermissi negligentius indignantur.

^a So too in the 2nd ed. for thought.

^b displeasantly.

^c a omitted.

At hoc ipsum quoque, uanis et nihil profuturis honoribus affici, an non eiusdem inscitiae est? Nam quid naturalis et uerae Stulti honores. uoluptatis affert nudatus alterius uertex, aut curuati poplites? hoccine tuorum poplitem dolori medebitur? aut tui capitum phrenesim leuabit? In hac fucatae uoluptatis imagine^a mirum quam suauiter insaniunt ii qui nobilitatis opinione sibi blandiuntur ac plaudunt, quod eiusmodi maioribus nasci contigerit, quorum longa hath bene counted ryche (for nowe nobilitie is nothyngelles¹), specially ryche in landes. And though their auncetours left them not one fote of lande, or els they themselves haue pyssed it agaynste the walles², yet they thynke themselves not the lesse noble therefore of one heare³.

^a imagine . . . nobilitatis om. A.

¹ More has used the same comparison before, p. 181.

² That is, in fancying themselves nobly born.

In thys numbere also they counte them that take pleasure and delyte (as I saide⁴) in gemmes and precious stones, and thynke themselues almoste goddes, if they chauce to gette an excellent one; speciallye of that kynde whyche in that tyme of their owne contreye men is had in hyghest estimation. For one kynde of stone kepeth not hys pryce styll in all contreis, and at all tymes. Nor they bye them not but taken out of the golde and bare; no, nor so nother, before^a they haue made the seller to swear that he wyll warraunte and assure it to ^a vntyll.

series diues (neque enim nunc aliud est nobilitas) habita sit, praesertim in praediis; nec pilo quidem minus sibi nobiles uidentur, etiam si maiores nihil inde reliquerint, aut

Vana nobilitas.

relictum | ipsi obliguerint.

His adnumerant eos qui gemmis ac lapillis (ut dixi) capiuntur, ac dii quodammodo sibi uidentur facti, si quando eximium aliquem consequantur, eius praesertim generis quod sua tempestate maximo apud suos aestimetur. neque enim apud omnes, neque omni tempore eadem genera sunt in precio. Sed nec nisi exemptum auro ac nudum comparant. Imo ne sic quidem, nisi adiurato uenditore, et praestanti cautionem, ueram gemmam ac lapidem uerum esse; tam solliciti sunt ne

Stultissima uoluptas ex gemmis.

Opinio hominum precium addit aut adimit gemmis.

oculis eorum

¹ The 'humiliation of the baronage by exhaustion, impoverishment, and reduction of numbers,' consequent on the Wars of the Roses, and the line of policy followed by Henry VII, tended to make such of the English nobility as were left in More's time follow their sovereign's example, and seek to repair their fortunes by devaloping their estates. Hence one cause of the inclosures so much complained of. See Bishop Stubbs: Medieval and Modern History, p. 390.

² 'Squandered it away.'—Burnet.

³ That is, not a whit the less noble.

⁴ See above, p. 181. It is recorded of Henry VII that 'much of the money he laid by he appears to have invested in the purchase of jewels.'—Gairdner, as before, p. 149.

be a trewe stone and no counterfeyt geme. Suche care they take lest a counterfet stone shoulde deceaue their eyes in the ^a steade of a right stone. But whye shouldest thou not take euen as muche pleasure in beholdynge a counterfette stone, whiche thyne eye cannot discerne from a ryght stone? They should both be of lyke value to the, euen as to a ^b blynde man. What shall I saye of them that kepe superfluous ryches, to take delectacion only in the beholdynge, and not in the vse or occupyenge therof? Do they take trewe pleasure, or els be they deceaued with false pleasure? Or of them that be in a contrary vice, hydynge the golde whiche they shall neuer occupie¹, nor peradventure neuer see more; and, whiles they take care leaste they shall leese it, do leese it in dede? For what is it elles, when they hyde it in the grounde, takynge it bothe from their owne vse, and perchaunce from all other mens also? And yet thou, when thou haste hidde thye treasure, as one out of all care, hoppest for ioye². The whyche treasure if it

^a the omitted.

^b the.

ueri loco adulterinus imponat. At spectaturo tibi cur minus praebeat oblectamenti factitius, quem tuus oculus non discernit a uero? Vterque ex aequo ualere debet tibi non minus hercle quam caeco. Quid hii qui superfluas opes adseruant, ut nullo acerui usu sed sola contemplatione delectentur; num ueram percipiunt, an falsa potius uoluptate luduntur? aut hi qui diuerso uitio aurum quo nunquam sint usuri, fortasse nec uisuri amplius, abscondunt, et solliciti ne perdant, perdunt. quid enim aliud est, usibus demptum tuis et omnium fortasse mortalium, telluri reddere? et tu tamen abstruso thesauro, uelut animi iam securus, laetitia gestis.)

¹ See the note above, p. 173.

² Dr. Lumby, in the Glossary to his edition of the Utopia takes 'hoppest' here as = 'hopest.' But it is plainly what we express by 'jump for joy.'

Compare 'leap for joy' in St. Luke vi. 23, and the use of 'hop' (though in a different sense) in the older version of the Psalms, lxxviii. 16.

shoulde chaunce to bee stoolen, and thou, ignoraunt of the thefte, shouldest dye tenne yeares after; all that tenne yeares space that thou lyuedest, after thy money was stolen, what matter was it to the whether it hadde bene taken a waye, or els sauffe as thou lefteste it? Truelye bothe wayes lyke proffyt came to the.

To thyes so foolyshe pleasures they ioyne dycers¹, whoes madnes they knowe by heare say and not by vse; hunters also, and hawkers. For what pleasure is there (saye they) in castynge the dice vpon a table; which thu^a hast done so often, that if there were anye pleasure in it, yet the ofte vse myghte make the werye therof? Or what delite can there be, and not rather dyspleasure, in hearynge the barkynge and howlynge of dogges²?

^a thou. The word is printed y^u, i. e. thu.

Quem si quis furto abstulerit, cuius tu ignarus furti decem post annis obieris, toto illo decennio, quo subtractae pecuniae superfuisti, quid tua retulit surreptum an saluum fuisset? utroque certe modo tantundem usus ad te peruenit.

Mira fictio et aptissima.

Ad has tam ineptas laetities aleatores (quorum insanium auditu non | usu cognouere), uenatores praeterea atque aucupes adiungunt. Nam quid habet, inquit, uoluptatis talos in alueum proicere, quod toties fecisti ut si quid uoluptatis inesset, oriri tamen potuisset ex frequenti usu satietas? aut quae suauitas esse potest, ac non fastidium potius, in audiendo latratu atque ululatu canum? aut qui maior uoluptatis sensus est, cum

Alea.
Venatio.

¹ See above, p. 144, and compare the Colloquium Senile of Erasmus: 'EU. In quo mari occurrit iste scopulus? aut quod habet nomen? PA. Mare non possum dicere, sed scopulus, plurimorum infamis exitiis, Latine dicitur Alea.' It is noticeable that in the Praise of Folly Erasmus places near together, as More does here, dice-players and hunters. The madness of the gambler, however, he assigns 'rather to the furies than to folly.'—Kennet's tr., p. 66.

² It may seem as if these were not always More's real sentiments. For in one of the 'pageauntes' which he devised in his youth come the lines:

'Manhod I am: therefore I me delyght

To hunt and hawke, to nourishe vp and fede

The grayhounde to the course, the hawke to the flyght,

And to bestryde a good and lusty stede:

These thynges become a very man in dede.'

English Works, leaf C iij. But the cast

Or what greater pleasure is there to be felte, when a dogge followeth an hare, then when a dogge followeth a dogge? for one thyng is done in both; that is to saye, runninge; if thou haste pleasure therein. But if the hope of slaughter, and the expectation of tearynge in pieces the beaste dothe please the, thou shouldest rather be moued with pitie to see a seely innocent hare murdered of a dogge; the weake of the stronger; the fearefull of the fearce; the innocente of the cruell and vnmercyfull. Therefore all thys exercyse of huntyng, as a thyng vnworthy to be vsed of free men, the Vtopians haue reiected to their bochers; to the whiche crafte (as wee sayde before) they appointe ther bondmen. For they counte huntyng the loweste, vyleste^a, and moste abiecte parte of bochery¹; and the other partes of it more leporem canis insequitur, quam quum canis canem? nempe idem utrobique agitur. accurritur enim, si te cursus oblectet. At si te caedis spes, laniatus expectatio sub oculis peragendi retinet, misericordiam potius mouere debet, spectare lepusculum a cane, imbecillum a ualidiore, fugacem ac timidum a feroce, innocium denique a crudeli discerptum. Itaque Vtopienses totum hoc uenandi exercitium, ut rem liberis indignam in lanios (quam artem per seruos obire eos supra diximus) reicerunt, infimam enim eius partem esse uenationem statuunt,

^a the vyleste.

At haec hodie ars est deorum aulicorum.

of More's mind was too serious, not to say austere, to suffer him long to take pleasure in sports, even of the manlier kind. 'God sent men hither to wake and work,' he wrote later on; 'and as for sleepe and gaming (if any gaming be good in this vale of misery, in this time of teares), it must serue but for a refreshing of the wearye and forewatched body, to renewe it vnto watche and labour agayne' (Ib. p. 1048). The characters seem reversed, when we compare with this the tracts on hunting and hawking written by a lady abbes, Dame Juliana Berners, and printed during More's childhood. Extracts from them are given in Warton's English Poetry, sect. xxvii.

¹ Robynson, after his manner, multiplies his author's epithets by three. Still, the expressions in the Latin are sufficiently strong to make us admire More's courage in thus assailing the favourite pastimes of his age and country. Erasmus, as usual, is at one with him. 'When they have run down their game,' he makes Folly say profytable and more honeste, as whiche do brynge^a muche more commoditie; and doo kyll^b beastes onely for necessytie. Where as the hunter seketh nothyng but pleasure of the seely and wofull beastes¹ slaughter and murder. The whiche pleasure in beholdyng death they thynke dothe ryse in the very beastes, other of a cruell affection of mynde, or els to be chaunged in continuaunce of time into crueltie, by longe vse of so cruell a pleasure. Thies therfore and all suche lyke, which is innumerable, though the common sorte of people doth take them for pleasures, yet they, seyng there is no naturall pleasauntnes in them, do playnelye determine them to haue no affinitie with trewe and right pleasure. Far as touchyng that they do commonlye moue the sence with delectacion (whiche semeth to be a worke of pleasure) thys doth nothing

^a as bryngyng.^b in that they kyll.

reliquas eius partes et utiliores et honestiores, ut quae et multo magis conferant^a, et animalia necessitatis duntaxat gratia perimant, quum uenator ab miseri animalculi caede ac laniatu nihil nisi uoluptatem petat. quam spectandae necis libidinem in ipsis etiam bestiis aut ab animi crudelis affectu censent exoriri, aut in crudelitatem denique assiduo tam efferae uoluptatis usu defluere. Haec igitur, et quicquid est huiusmodi (sunt enim innumera) quanquam pro uoluptatibus mortalium uulgu habeat, illi tamen quum natura nihil insit suaue, 110 plane statuunt, cum | uera uoluptate nihil habere commercii. Nam quod uulgo sensum iucunditate perfundunt (quod uoluptatis opus

^a conseruant, A

of the hunters, 'what strange pleasure they take in cutting it up! Cows and sheep may be slaughtered by common butchers, but what is killed in hunting must be broken up by none under a gentleman.' The formalities are then duly described (Kennet's tr., as before, p. 63). Gilbert Wakefield, writing to Fox, who had met with an accident when out shooting, reads him a homily on the text 'indignae homine docto voluptates' (Cic. De Off. ii. 1), in which he pronounces 'those pleasures to misbecome a man of letters, which consist in mangling, maiming and depriving of that invaluable and irretrievable blessing, its existence, an inoffensive pensioner on the universal bounty of the common Feeder and Protector of all his offspring.'—Correspondence of Wakefield and Fox, 1813, p. 79.

¹ Burnet preserves the force of the diminutive animalculi, 'of so small and miserable an Animal.'

diminishe their opinion. For not the nature of the thyng, but there peruerse and lewde custome is the cause hereof; whiche causeth them to accepte bitter or sowre thinges for swete thinges; euen as women with childe, in their viciate and corrupt taste, thinke pitche and tallowe sweter then anye honney. Howbeit no mans iudgement, depraued and corrupte, other by sickenes or by custome, can chaunge the nature of pleasure, more then it can doo the natur of other thinges.

They make diuers kyndes of trew^a pleasures. For som they attribute to the soule, and som to the bodye. To the soule they gyue intellygence, and that delectation that cummeth of the contemplation of truthe. Here vnto is ioyned the pleasaunt remembraunce of the good lyfe past¹.

The pleasure of the bodye they deuide into ii. partes. The first is when delectation is sensibly felte and perceaued:

^a trew omitted.

uidetur) nihil de sententia decedunt. non enim ipsius rei natura, sed ipsorum peruersa consuetudo in causa est: cuius uitio fit ut amara pro dulcibus amplectantur, non aliter ac mulieres grauidae
Citta² in grauidis. picem et seuum corrupto gustu melle mellitius arbitrantur. Nec cuiusquam tamen aut morbo aut consuetudine deprauatum iudicium mutare naturam, ut non aliarum rerum, ita nec uoluptatis potest.

Voluptatum quas ueras fatentur species diuersas faciunt. Si-
Verae uoluptatis species. quidem alias animo, corpori alias tribuunt. Animo dant intellectum, eamque dulcedinem quam ueri contemplatio pepererit. Adhaec suauis additur bene actae uitae Voluptates corporis. memoria, et spes non dubia futuri boni. Corporis uoluptatem in duas partiuntur formas, quarum prima sit ea quae sensum perspicua suauitate perfundit; quod alias earum

¹ As Dibdin points out, Robynson omits altogether the concluding words of the Latin, et spes non dubia futuri boni. Burnet correctly renders, 'and the assured Hopes of a future Happiness.'

² Citta, in Greek κίττα or κίσσα, was a word used to denote a jay or magpie, and then, like Galen's κίττης, the false appetite or longing referred to in the text.—See Mayne's Expository Lexicon (1860), p. 962.

whiche many times chaunceth by the renewing and refreshyng of thoes partes which owre naturall heate drieth vp: thys cummeth by meate and drynke: and sumtymes whyles those thynges be^a voided, wherof is in the body ouer great abundaunce. This pleasure is felte when wee doo our naturall easemente, or when we be doynge the acte of generatyon, or when the ytchyng of annye parte is eased with rubbyng or stratchinge. Sumtymes pleasure riseth, exhibitinge to any membre nothing that it desireth, nor taking from it any payne that it feeleth; which for all that^b tikleth and moueth our senses with a certein secrete efficacy, but with a manifest motion, and^c turneth them to it; as is that which cummeth of musicke.

The second part of bodely pleasure they say is that which consisteth and resteth in the quiete and vpright¹ state of the body. And that truelye is euery mans owne

^a be expulsed and.

^b neuerthelesse.

^c and omitted.

instauracione partium fit, quas insitus nobis calor exhausserit; nam hae cibo potuque redduntur; alias, dum egeruntur illa quorum copia corpus exuberat. Haec suggeritur, dum excrementis intestina purgamus, aut opera liberis datur, aut ullius prurigo partis frictu scalpuae lenitur. Interdum uero uoluptas oritur, nec redditura quicquam quod membra nostra desyderent, nec ademptura quo laborant; caeterum quae sensus nostros tamen in quadam occulta sed 111 illustri motu titillet afficiatque, et in se conuertat; | qualis ex musica nascitur.

Alteram corporeae uoluptatis formam eam uolunt esse, quae in quieto atque aequabili corporis statu consistat; id est nimirum sua

¹ This word appears sometimes to have been used as simply equivalent to 'right,' without any idea of erectness. So the Greek orthos. But the Latin rather means 'well balanced,' with all the humours, &c., in proper temperament. From this comes what Paley calls 'that harmonious conformation,' which he says 'gives to the mind its sense of complacency and satisfaction.' Moral Philosophy, Bk I. ch. vi. Compare also Cic. De Off. I. xi. 37, 'sed maximam illam uoluptatem habemus, quae percipitur omni dolore detracto.'

propre health, entermyngled and dysturbed wyth no grieffe. For thys, yf yt be not letted nor assaulted with no greiffe¹, is delectable of yt selfe, thoughe yt be moued wyth no externall or outwarde pleasure. For though it be not so plain and manyfeste to the sense, as the gredye luste of eatynge and drynckynge, yet neuerthelesse manye take it for the chyefeste pleasure. All the Vtopians graunte yt to be a ryghte greate^a pleasure, and as yow wolde saye the foundatyon and grownde of all pleasures; as whyche euen alone ys able to make the state and condytyon of lyffe delectable and pleasaunte; and, yt beyng ones taken awaye, there ys no place lefte for annye pleasure. For to be wythowte greyyffe, not hauinge health, that they call vnsensybylyte and not pleasure. The Vtopians haue longe agoo reiected and condempned the opynyon of them, whyche sayde that stedfaste and quyete healthe (for thys questyon also hath bene dylygentelye debated emonge them) owghte not therefore to be cownted a pleasure, bicause they saye yt can not be presentlye and sensybylye perceaued and felte

^a souereigne.

ciusque nullo interpellata malo sanitas. Haec siquidem, si nihil eam doloris oppugnet, per se ipsa delectat, etiam si nulla extrinsecus adhibita uoluptate moueatur. Quanquam enim sese minus effert, minusque offert sensui, quam tumida illa edendi bibendique libido, nihilo tamen secius multi eam statuunt uoluptatum maximam. omnes fere Vtopienses magnam et uelut fundamentum omnium ac basim fatentur, ut quae uel sola placidam et optabilem uitae conditionem reddat, et qua sublata nullus usquam reliquus sit cuiquam uoluptati locus. Nam dolore prorsus uacare, nisi adsit sanitas, stuporem certe non uoluptatem uocant. Iam dudum explosum est apud eos decretum illorum, qui stabilem et tranquillam sanitatem (nam haec quoque quaestio gnauiter apud eos agitata est) ideo non habendam pro uoluptate censebant, quod prae-

Valeat possessor oportet?

¹ We should now say 'pain' (dolor). See the Glossary.

² Hor. Epist. I. ii. 49.

by some owtwarde¹ motion. But, of the contrarye parte, nowe they agree almoste all in thys, that healt he ys a moste souereygne pleasure. For seinge that in syckenes (saye they) is grieffe, which is a mortal ennemie to pleasure, euen as sicknes is to health, why shuld not then pleasure be in the quietnes of health? For they say it maketh nothing to thys matter, whether yow saye that sickenes is a grieffe, or that in sickenes is grieffe; for all cummeth to one purpose. For whether health be a pleasure it selfe, or a necessary cause of pleasure, as fyer is of heate, truelye bothe wayes it foloweth, that they cannot be without pleasure that be in perfyte healt he. Furthermore, whyles we eate (saye they), then health, whiche began to be appayred, fyghteth by the helpe of foode against hunger. In the whych fighte whyles healt he by lytle and lytle getteth the vpper hande, that same procedyng², and (as ye would say) that onwardnes to the wonte strengthe sentem non posse dicerent, nisi motu quopiam contrario, senti. Verum contra nunc in hoc prope uniuersi conspirant, sanitatem uel in primis uoluptati esse. Etenim quum in morbo, inquit, dolor sit, qui uoluptati implacabilis hostis est, non aliter ac sanitati morbus, quidni uicissim insit sanitatis tranquillitati uoluptas? nihil enim ad hanc rem referre putant, seu morbus dolor esse, seu morbo dolor inesse, dicatur. Tantundem enim utroque modo effici. Quippe si

 112 sanitas aut uoluptas ipsa sit, aut necessa|rio uoluptatem pariat, uelut calor igni gignitur, nimirum utrobique efficitur ut, quibus immota sanitas adest, his uoluptas abesse non possit. Praeterea dum uescimur, inquit, quid aliud quam sanitas, quae labefactari coeperat, aduersus esurientem (cibo commilitone) depugnat? in qua dum paulatim inualescit, ille ipse profectus ad solitum uigorem suggerit illam, qua sic

¹ Burnet paraphrases: 'Some have thought that there was no Pleasure, but what was excited by some sensible Motion in the Body.' Both translators neglect the proper meaning of contrario, and Robynson in addition ignores the presence of nisi. It is literally: 'saying that its presence could not be felt except by some opposite emotion.' More explains more fully afterwards what he means by this. when he speaks of the pleasure felt in eating. for example, as measured by the displacement of the opposite pain of hunger.

² In the sense of 'progress' (profectus).

mynistreth that pleasure, wherbye wee be so reffreshed. Health therefore, whiche in the conflycte is ioyfull, shall it not bee merye when it hathe gotten the victory¹? But as sone as it hathe recouered thee pristynate strengthe, whyche thinge onelye in all the fyghte it coueted, shall it incontinent be astonied? Nor shall it not knowe nor imbrace the owne wealthe and goodnes? For that^a it is sayed healte can not be felte, this, they thinke, is nothing trew. For what man wakyng, say they, feleth not hymselfe in health, but he that is not²? Is there annye man so possessed wyth stonyse insensibilitie, or with the sleping sicknes^b, that he wyll not graunt health to be acceptable to hym and delectable? But what other thing ✕ is delectation, than that whiche by an other name is called pleasure?

They imbrace chiefly³ the pleasures of the mind. For ^a where.

^b the lethargie.

reficimur, uoluptatem. Sanitas ergo quae in conflictu laetatur, eadem non gaudebit adepta uictoriam? sed pristinum robur, quod solum toto conflictu petiuerat, tandem feliciter assecuta, protinus obstupescet, nec bona sua cognoscet atque amplexabitur? Nam quod non sentiri sanitas dicta est, id uero perquam procul a uero putant. Quis enim uigilans, inquit, sanum esse se non sentit, nisi qui non est? Quem ne tantus aut stupor aut lethargus adstringit, ut sanitatem non iucundam sibi fateatur ac delectabilem? at delectatio quid aliud quam alio nomine uoluptas est?

Amplectuntur ergo in primis animi uoluptates (eas enim primas

¹ Burnet renders: 'And if the Conflict is Pleasure, the Victory must yet breed a greater Pleasure.' But this, though neat, does not give the point of the antithesis, rightly observed by Robynson, between laetatur and gaudebit. There is in those words the same contrast as between 'joy' and 'gladness;' the latter denoting what Robynson calls 'being merry,' the state of calm cheerfulness when victory is won. Tennyson showed his perception of the difference, when, in his translation of a passage from the Iliad (viii. 542-561), he altered 'the hind rejoices at the heart' to 'the shepherd gladdens at his heart.'

² Burnet, more clearly, 'for what man is in health, that does not perceive it [is not conscious of it] when he is awake?'

³ The word 'therefore' (ergo) should have been introduced; this being a conclusion from what goes before.

them they cownte the chiefist and most principall of all. The cheyfe parte of them they thinke doth come of the exercise of vertue, and conscience of good lyffe. Of thies pleasures that the boddye ministreth they geue the premyence to helth. For the delyte of eating and drincking, and whatsoeuer hath anny like pleasauntnes, they determyne to be pleasures mucche to be desiered, but no other wayes than for healthes sake. For suche thynges of theyre owne propre nature be not^a pleasaunte, but in that they resyste syckenes preuelye stealyng¹. Therefore, lyke as yt ys a wyse mans parte rather to auoyde syckenes, then to wyshe for medycynes, and rather to dryue away and put to flyghte carefull greyffes², then to call for comforte; so yt ys much better not to neade thys kynde of pleasure, then in sealyng³ the contrarye greyffe to be eased of the same^b. The whyche kynde of pleasure yf annye man take for hys felycyyte, that man muste nedes graunte, that then he shall be in ^a not so. ^b [then in . . . same] then thereby to be eased of the contrarie grief.

omnium principesque ducunt) quarum potissimum partem censent ab exercitio uirtutum bonaque uitae conscientia proficisci. Earum uoluptatem quas corpus suggerit palmam sanitati deferunt. Nam edendi bibendique suauitatem, et quicquid eandem oblectamenti rationem habet, appetenda quidem, sed non nisi sanitatis gratia, statuunt. Neque enim per se iucunda esse talia, sed quatenus
 113 aduersae ualetudini clanculum | surreptenti resistunt: ideoque sapienti, sicuti magis deprecandos morbos, quam optandam medicinam, et dolores profligandos potius quam adsciscenda solatia, ita hoc quoque uoluptatis genere non egere quam deliniri praestiterit: quo uoluptatis genere si quisquam se beatum putet, is necesse est fateatur se tum demum fore felicissimum, si ea uita contigerit, quae in permooste felycytye, yf he lyue that lyffe whyche ys ledde in contynuall honger, thurste, itchyng, eatyng, drynkynge, scratchyng, and rubbyng¹. The whyche lyffe howe not onlye foule yt is^a, but also myserable and wretched, who perceauethe not? Thyse dowteles be the baseste pleasures of all, as vnpure and vnperfecte. For they neuer cum but accompanied wyth their contrary greiffes. As with the pleasure of eatinge is ioyned hunger, and that after no very egal sort. For of thies ii. the gryeffe is bothe the more vehement, and also of longer continuaunce. For it rysethe^b before the pleasure, and endeth not vntyll the pleasure dye wyth it.

¹ That is, stealing on.

² The phrase here used might recall one of the first precepts of the Schola Salernitana for obtaining health: Curas tolle graves. But the Latin has simply dolores, 'pains.'

³ Robynson's meaning is: 'than, by stopping the opposite pain (as of hunger, when we eat), to gain a sensation of pleasure.' This is an expansion of the single word deliniri (deleniri), 'to feel the gratification.'

Wherfore such pleasures they think not greatly to be set by, but in that they be necessary. Howbeit they haue delite also in thies, and thankfully knowledge the tender loue of mother nature, which with most plesaunt delectation allureth her children to that, which of necessitye they be driuen often vse^c. For how wretched and miserable petua fame, siti, pruritu, esu, potatione, scalpitu frictuque traducatur: quae quam non foeda solum, sed misera etiam sit, quis non uidet? Infimae profecto omnium hae uoluptates sunt, ut minime syncerae; neque enim unquam subeunt, nisi contrariis coniunctae doloribus. Nempe cum edendi uoluptate copulatur esuries, idque non satis aequa lege. Nam ut uehementior, ita longior quoque dolor est: quippe et ante uoluptatem nascitur, et nisi uoluptate una commoriente non exstinguitur.

^a The words yt is transposed to come after wretched.

^b beginneth.

^c [which . . . vse] to the necessarie vse wherof they must from time to time continually be forced and driuen.

Huiusmodi ergo uoluptates, nisi quatenus expetit necessitas, haud magni habendas putant. Gaudent tamen etiam his, gratique agnoscunt naturae parentis indulgentiam, quae foetus suos ad id quod necessitatis causa tam assidue faciendum erat etiam blandissima suauitate pelliceat. Quanto enim in tedio uiuendum erat, si ut

¹ This is the horn of the dilemma on which Socrates impales Callicles in the Gorgias, § 495. If pleasure consists in counteracting painful sensations, then those sensations must be always present, or the counteraction, in which lies the pleasure, could not go on.

should our liffe be, if thies daily greiffes of hunger and thrust coulde not be dreuen away, but with bitter potions, and sower medicines; as the other deseases be, where with we be seldomer trowbled? But bewtye, strengthe, nemblenes, thies, as peculiare and pleasaunte giftes of nature, they make muche of. But those pleasures which be receaued by the eares, the iyes, and the nose; which nature willeth to be proper and peculiar to man¹ (for no other kind of liuing beastes^a doth behold the fayrenes and the bewtie of the worlde, or is moued with anny respect of sauours, but only for the diuersity of meates, nother perceaueth the concordant and discordant distaunces of soundes and tunes) thies pleasures (I say) they accept and allowe, as certein pleasaunt reioysinges² of liffe. But in all thinges thys cautell they vse, that a lesse pleasure hinder not a bigger, and that the pleasur be no cause of dyspleasur; whych they thinke to followe of necessitye, if the pleasure be vnhoneste. But yet to dyspyse the comlynes of bewtye, to waste the bodylye

^a no other liuing creature.

caeterae aegritudines quae nos infestant rarius, ita hii quoque cotidiani famis ac sitis morbi uenenis ac pharmacis amaris essent abigendi? At formam, uires, agilitatem, haec ut propria iucundaque naturae dona libenter fouent. Quin eas quoque uoluptates, quae
 114 per | aures, oculos, ac nares admittuntur, quas natura proprias ac peculiare esse homini uoluit (neque enim aliud animantium genus aut mundi formam pulchritudinemque suspicit, aut odorum, nisi ad cibi discrimen, ulla commouetur gratia, neque consonas inter se discordesque sonorum distantias internoscit) et has, inquam, ut iucunda quaedam uitae condimenta persequuntur. In omnibus autem hunc habent modum, ne maiorem minor impediatur, neu dolorem aliquando uoluptas pariat; quod necessario sequi censent, si inhonesta sit. At certe formae decus contemnere, uires deterere, agilitatem in pigritiam

¹ Cicero develops this argument in De Nat. Deor. ii. § 56. Compare also the familiar lines of Ovid, Met. i. 85-6.

² Burnet's rendering gives the force of condimenta better: 'as the pleasant Relishes and Seasonings of Life.'

strengthe, to tourne nymblenes into sloughishnes, to consume and make feble the boddye wyth fastynge¹, to doo iniury to health, and to reiect the other^a pleasaunte motyons of nature (onles a man neglecte thies hys^b commodityes, whyles he doth wyth a feruent zeale procure the wealth of others, or the commen proffytte, for the whyche pleasure forborne he is in hope of a greater pleasure of God^c): els for a vayne shaddowe of vertue, for the wealthe and proffette of no man, to punyshe hymselfe, or to the intente he maye be able courragiouslye to suffre aduersitye, whyche perchaunce shall neuer come to hym: thys to doo they thynke it a poynte of extreame madnes, and a token of a man cruelly minded towardes hymselfe, and vnkynd towarde nature, as one so dysdaynyng to be in her daunger², that he renounceth and refuseth all her benefytes.

Thys is their sentence and opinion of vertue and ^a other omitted.

^b hys omitted.

^c at goddes hand.

uertere, corpus exhaurire ieiuniis, sanitati iniuriam facere, et caetera naturae blandimenta respuere, nisi quis haec sua commoda negligat, dum aliorum publicum^a ardentius procurat, cuius laboris uice maiorem a deo uoluptatem expectat; alioquin ob inanem uirtutis umbram nullius bono semet affligere, uel quo aduersa ferre minus moleste possit, nunquam fortasse uentura: hoc uero putant esse dementissimum, animique et in se crudelis, et erga naturam ingrattissimi, cui tanquam debere quicquam dedignetur, omnibus eius beneficiis renunciat.

Annotandum
et hoc diligenter.

Haec est eorum de uirtute ac uoluptate sententia; qua nisi sanctius

^a Leg. publicumue, sc. commodum.

¹ More doubly guards himself against any unfair use being made of his words, (1) by the proviso that such bodily mortifications are not undergone for the public good or the welfare of others; and (2) by the addition, later on, of a disclaimer of any approval of customs and opinions which he is simply relating. But when every allowance is rightly made, the reader will judge whether there is not here a condemnation of the ascetic spirit, as a thing meritorious in itself. The marginal annotator of the Latin, a little further on, calls attention to the point as one deserving careful consideration.

² See note above, p. 182.

pleasure. And they beleue that by mans reason none can be fownde trewer then this, onles annye godlyer be inspyred into man from heauen. Wherin whether they belyue well or no, nother the tyme dothe suffer us to discusse, nother it ys nowe necessarye. For we haue taken vpon vs to shewe and declare theyr lores and orde-naunces, and not to defende them¹.

But thys thyng I beleue verely: howe soeuer thies decrees be, that their is in no place of the wordle nother a more excellent people, nother a more flouryshyng commen wealthe. They be lyghte and quycke of boddy, full of actiuity and nymblenes, and of more strengthe then a man wold iudge them by theyre stature, whyche for all that ys not to lowe. And thoughe theyre soyle be not verye frutefull, nor theyre ayer verye holsome, yet agaynste the ayer they soo defende them wyth temperate dyete, and soo order and husbande theyr grounde wyth dylygente trauayle, that in no contreye ys greater increase, and plentye of corne and cattell, nor mens bodies of longer liffe, and subiect or apte to fewer diseases.

aliquid inspiret homini caelitus immissa religio, nullam inuestigari credunt humana ratione ueriores. qua in re rectene an secus sentiant, excutere nos neque tempus patitur, neque necesse est; quippe 115 qui narranda eorum instituta, | non etiam tuenda, suscepimus.

Caeterum hoc mihi certe persuadeo, ut ut sese habeant haec decreta, nusquam neque praestantiorem populum neque feliciorem esse rempublicam. Corpore sunt agili uegetoque, uirium² amplius quam statura promittat. nec ea tamen improcera. et quum neque solo sint usquequaque fertili, nec admodum salubri caelo, aduersus aerem ita sese temperantia uictus muniunt, terrae sic medentur industria, ut nusquam gentium sit frugis pecorisque proventus uberior, aut hominum uiuaciora corpora, paucioribusque and not an advocate.

Felicitas Vtopiensium ac descriptio.

¹ This deserves notice, as indicating the author's own view of his freedom from responsibility, as a narrator only,

² A 'genitivus qualitatis sine epitheto.'

There, therefore, a man maye see well and diligentlye exploited and furnished, not onely those thinges whiche husbandmen doo commenly in other countreys; as by craft and cunning to remedy the barrennes of the groundes; but also a hole wood by the handes of the people plucked vp by the rotes in one place and sett agayne in an other place¹. Wherin was hadde regard and consideration not of plenty but of commodious carriage; that wood and tymber might be nigher to the sea, or the riuers, or the cities. For it is lesse labour and busines to carrye grayne farre by lande then wood. The people be gentle, merye, quycke, and fyne wytted, delytynge in quyettes, and, when nede requyreth, able to abyde and suffre muche bodelye labour. Elles they be not greatlye desyerous and fonde of yt; but in the exercyse and studdye of the mynde they be neuer werye.

When they had harde me speake of the Greke² lytter-morbis obnoxia. Itaque non ea modo quae uulgo faciunt agricolae diligenter ibi administrata conspicias, ut terram natura maligniorem arte atque opera iuuent; sed populi manibus alibi radicitus euulsam syluam, alibi consitam uideas: qua in re habita est non ubertatis sed uecturae ratio; ut essent ligna aut mari, aut fluuiis, aut urbibus ipsis uiciniora: minore enim cum labore terrestri itinere fruges quam ligna longius afferuntur. Gens facilis ac faceta, sollers, ocio gaudens, corporis laborum (quum est usus) satis patiens, caeterum alias haud-ququam sane appetens; animi studiis infatigata.

Qui quum a nobis accepissent de literis et disciplina Graecorum

¹ The reader will be reminded of Milton's description:—

'They pluck'd the seated hills with all their load,' &c., and what critics call the 'magnifica imago' of Claudian: Gigantomachia, 66 sqq.

² More's fondness for the Greek language, and his proficiency in it, have been spoken of in the Introduction. In this respect the friends of enlightenment could claim him as one of themselves. Nothing can show better the wide difference between his standpoint and that of a defender of things as they were, like Alberto Pio, Count of Carpi, than the way in which they respectively treat the claims of Greek to recognition. More, arguing against Dorp, insists that it contains the most precious treasures of all. 'Quis nesciat,' he asks, 'Graecam esse arature^a or learnynge (for in Latyne theyre was nothyng that I thoughte they wolde greatlye allowe, besydes hystoryens and Poetes), they made wonderfull earneste and importunate sute vnto me, that I wolde teache and instructe them in that tonge and learnynge. I beganne therefore to reade¹ vnto them; at the fyrste, truelye, more bycause I wolde not seme to refuse the laboure, then that I hooped that they wolde annye thyng proffytte therin. But when I had gone forwarde a lytle, and^b perceaued incontynente by theyr dylygence that my labour should not be bestowed in vayne; for they beganne so easelye to fassyon theyre letters, so plainly to pronounce the woordes, so quyckely to learne by harte, and so suerly

^a sic.^b I.

(nam in latinis praeter historias ac poetas nihil erat quod uidebantur magnopere probaturi) mirum quanto studio contenderunt, ut eas liceret ipsis nostra interpretatione perdiscere. Coepimus ergo legere, magis adeo primum, ne recusare laborem uideremur, quam

Vtilitas linguae
graecae.Docilitas Vtopiensium.^a

116 quod | fructum eius aliquem speraremus. At ubi paulum processimus, ipsorum diligentia fecit ut nostram haud frustra impendendam animo statim praeciperemus. Si quidem literarum formas tam facile imitari, uerba tam expedite pronunciare, tam celeriter mandare memoriae, et tanta cum fide reddere² coeperunt, ut

^a Addit B. mira.

eam quae summopere sit cum ab uniuersis mortalibus, tum uero seorsum a Christianis amplectenda, utpote a qua et omnes disciplinae reliquae, et Nouum Testamentum fere totum nobis foelicissime successit.' He urges Dorp, even though late in the day, to learn it. Lucubrationes, p. 415. Alberto Pio, on the other hand, rebutting the attacks of Erasmus, the champion of bonae literae, wishes devoutly that those bonae literae had never found their way across the Alps. 'Quanto salubrius,' he exclaims, 'ut illas nunquam didicissent [theologi], quam ut earum occasione tam vastum incendium excitassent, quo fere uniuersa Germania conflagrauit? Quanto commodius Germaniae, ut haec bonae literae alpes nunquam transcendissent, ut et Germani contenti materna lingua, vel utcunque latina, tam atrocia dissidia non concitassent?' Tres et uiginti libri in . . . Erasmi, &c., 1531, leaf 10 verso.

¹ Lat. legere, the technical term for oral instruction.

² This was the regular term for the

to rehearse the same, that I marueled at it; sauynge that the most parte of them were fyne and chosen wittes, and of rype age, pyked oute of the companye of the learned men, whyche not onlye of theyr owne faee^a and voluntarye wyll, but also by the commaundemente of the councell, vndertoke to learne thys langage. Therefore in lesse than iii. yeres space their was nothing in the Greke tonge that they lackede. They were able to reade good authours wythout anny staye, if the booke were not false¹.

Thys kynde of learnynge, as I suppose, they toke so muche the souner, bycause it is sumwhat allyaunte to them. For I thynke that thys nation tooke their beginnynge of the Grekes, bycause their speche, which in all other poyntes is not muche vnlyke the persian tonge², kepeth dyuers signes and tokens of the greke langage in the names of their cityes and of their magystrates. They haue of me (for, when I was determyned to entre into my nobis miraculi esset loco, nisi quod pleraque pars eorum, qui non

^a Misprint for free.

 At nunc stipites sua solum sponte accensi, uerum senatus quoque et caudices decreto iussi, ista sibi discenda sumpserunt, e nudicantur literis: mero scholasticorum selectissimis ingeniis et matura felicissima aetate fuerunt. Itaque minus quam triennio nihil erat ingenia uolupta- in lingua quod requirerent; bonos autores, nisi obstet tibus corrumpuntur. libri menda, inoffense perlegerent.

Eas literas, ut equidem conicio, ob id quoque facilius arriperunt, quod nonnihil illis essent cognatae. Suspikor enim eam gentem a graecis originem duxisse, propterea quod sermo illorum, caetera fere Persicus, non nulla graeci sermonis uestigia seruet in urbium ac magistratuum uocabulis. Habent ex me (nam librorum sarcinam scholar's repetition of what he had learnt by heart. So in Lily's Carmen de moribus:—

'Incubens studio, submissa uoce loqueris;

Nobis dum reddis, uoce canorus eris.

Et quaecumque mihi reddis, discantur ad unguem,

Singula et abiecto uerbula redde libro.'

¹ That is, unless the text were defective. Burnet avoids the clause.

² See note above, p. 135.

.iiii. voyage¹, I caste into the shippe in the steade of marchandyse a pretye fardell of bookes, bycause I intended to come agayne rather neuer than shortelye) the^a mooste parte of Platoes woorkes; more of Aristotles; also Theophrastus² of Plantes, but in diuers places (which I am sorrye for) vnperfecte. For whyles wee were saylynge^b, a mormosett chaunced vpon the booke, as yt was negligentlye layde by; whyche, wantonlye playinge therewyth, plucked owte certeyne leaues, and toore them in pieces³. Of them that haue wrytten the grammer, they haue onelye Lascaris⁴. For Theodorus I caried not wyth me; nor mediocrem loco mercium quarto nauigaturus in nauem conieci, quod mecum plane decreueram nunquam potius redire quam cito) Platonis opera pleraque, Aristotelis plura; Theophrastum item de plantis, sed pluribus, quod doleo, in locis mutilum. In librum enim, dum navigabamus negligentius habitum, cercopithecus incidere; qui lasciuiens ac ludibundus paginas aliquot hinc atque hinc euulsas lacerauit. Ex

^a they haue, I saye, of me the.

^b a shipborde.

117 hiis qui scripsere grammat|cam, Lascarem habent tantum; Theodo-

¹ See the Introduction, p. xxxvii.

² The works of Theophrastus had been published at Venice, in 1497. Why More should give so prominent a place to this treatise, as to mention it next after Plato and Aristotle, is uncertain. It may have been a favourite of his own, or one which seemed a natural companion for a traveller in foreign lands. Theophrastus was often included in the same edition with Aristotle, as in the great Venice edition of 1493-8.

³ Besides the Rabelaisian vraisemblance which this little touch gives to the description, there is no doubt that More is calling up some actual reminiscence of the tricks of his own pet monkey. This animal, more famous than the one which is said to have carried the infant Cromwell up in its paws to the roof of the house, is immortalized in Erasmus's Colloquy Amicitia and has its place in Holbein's picture of the household of Sir Thomas More.

⁴ The first edition of the Grammatica Graeca of Constantine Lascaris appeared at Milan in 1476, after which editions appeared frequently. Theodore Gaza's Introductiuae Grammaticae Libri iv., mentioned just afterwards, first appeared from the press of Aldus in 1495. Gaza's work was recognized by competent judges 'as superior to all other manuals of the kind.' Budaeus 'praised it as a masterpiece of the grammarian's art.' Erasmus translated it to his class at Cambridge, and Richard Croke to his class at Leipsic. —See Mullinger's University of Cambridge, i. p. 430.

neuer a dyctyonarye, but Hesichius¹ and Dioscorides. They sett greate stoore by Plutarches bookes. And they be delayed wyth Lucianes merye conceytes and iestes. Of the Poettes they haue Aristophanes, Homer, Euripides, and Sophocles in Aldus small prynte. Of the Historyans they haue Thucidides, Herodotus, and Herodian. Also my companion, Tricius Apinatus², caried with him phisick bokes, certein smal woorkes of Hippocrates, and Galenes rum enim non aduexi mecum, nec dictionarium³ aliquem praeter Hesychium ac Dioscoridem. Plutarchi libellos habent charissimos, et Luciani quoque facetiis ac lepore capiuntur. Ex poetis habent Aristophanem, Homerum atque Euripidem, tum Sophoclem minusculis Aldi formulis; ex historicis Thucydidem atque Herodotum, necnon Herodianum. Quin in re medica quoque sodalis meus Tricius Apinatus aduexerat secum parua quaedam Hippocratis opuscula, ac

¹ The Glossarium Graecum of Hesychius had only recently been issued from the press when More wrote; the first edition being that brought out under the care of Musurus at Venice, in 1514. Pedanius Dioscorides, of Anazarbus near Tarsus, was a medical writer in the time of Nero. Vives, in his De tradendis disciplinis (ed. 1636, p. 553), mentions his De Herbis as a treatise to be studied, along with Theophrastus's De stirpibus, named by More just above. The works of Dioscorides had been printed at Venice in 1499.

No special notice is needed of the common authors that are next mentioned in the text, who, as it will be observed, are all Greek. It may be remarked, however, that Herodian was a very favourite author after the revival of letters. He and Sallust are among those most frequently prescribed in the statutes of early grammar schools in this country. Vives (ubi sup. p. 530) says that the student 'ad historiam praeleget Herodianum, ut cum versione conferat Angeli Politiani.

Est author ille candidus ex se ac facilis; sed ea gratia Politianus transtulit, ut non ab homine Graeco videatur genitus sed a Latino.'

² This is a name evidently formed from the 'apinae tricacque' of Martial, xiv. i. 7:

'Sunt apinae tricacque et si quid vilius istis.'

So also in I. cxiv. i, 2:

'Quaecumque lusi juvenis et puer quondam,

Apinasque nostras;'

lines which More may often have had in his mind, as reflecting youthful occupations of his own. Perotti in his Cornucopiae, 1513, col. 466, gives the explanation of the phrase. Apina and Trica, he says, were two small towns in Apulia, captured (according to Pliny) by Diomede; the names of which passed into a proverb for anything trivial—mere bagatelles. Much to the same effect Erasmus in his Adagia, 1629, p. 134.

³ A late Latin word for glossarium, though that is not much better.

Microtechne¹: the whyche boke they haue in greate estymation. For though there be almost no nation vnder heauen that hath lesse nede of Phisicke² then they, yet, this notwithstanding, Phisicke is no where in greater honour; bycause they count the knowledge of yt emonge the goodliest, and mooste profytable partes of Philosophie. For whyles they by the helpe of thys Philosophie searche owte the secrete mysteres of nature, they thynke that they not onlye receaue therby^a wonderfull greate pleasur, but also^b obteyn great thankes and fauour of the auctoure and maker therof. Whome they thynke, accordyng to the

^a [that . . . therby] themselves to receaue therby not onlye.

^b also to.

Microtechnen Galeni, quos libros magno in precio habent. Siquidem et si omnium ferè gentium re medica minime egent, nusquam tamen in maiore honore est, uel eo ipso quod eius cognitionem numerant inter pulcherrimas atque utilissimas partes philosophiæ; cuius ope philosophiæ dum naturæ secreta scrutantur, uidentur sibi non solum admirabilem inde uoluptatem percipere, sed apud autorem quoque eius atque opificem summam inire gratiam; quæ^a caeterorum more utilissima.

Medicina

^a Sic etiam A.; B. recte quem.

¹ No collected edition of Galen's works in Greek had appeared at the time when More wrote; the earliest being that of Aldus at Venice, in 1525. But separate treatises had been already published, as the Therapeuticorum Libri xiv, in 1500. The Microtechne, 'Little art,' was a name given to Galen's Τέχνη Ιατρική, which, as Donaldson says, 'was the text-book and chief subject of examination for medical students in the middle ages, when it was known in barbarous Latin as the Tegnum or Microtegnum (Microtechnum) of Galen'—Literature of Ancient Greece (1858), ii. p. 274. This was in contradistinction to the Megalo- tegnum, or Θεραπευτικῆς μεθόδου βιβλία ἰδ'.

² By 'Phisicke' here is meant medicine, not physical science, as seen by the Latin. But in what follows More is plainly thinking of physical, or natural, science in general. As a contrast to the picture he draws, may be compared the description of Erasmus, in which the medical practitioner alone thrives, while the professors of other sciences starve:—'Esuriunt theologi, frigent physici, ridentur astrologi, negliguntur dialectici; solus ιατρὸς ἀνὴρ πολλῶν ἀντάξιος ἄλλων.' Encomium Moriae, ed. 1668, p. 82.

fassyon of other artyfycers, to haue sett furthe the maruelous and gorgious frame of the worlde for man to^a beholde; whome onelye he hathe made of wytte and capacitye to consydre and vnderstand the excellencye of so greate a woorke. And therefore, saye they, dothe he beare^b more good wyll and loue to the curyous and diligent beholder and vewere of his woorke, and maruelour at the same, then he doth to him, whyche lyke a very beaste^c wythowte wytte and reason, or as one wythowte sense or mouynge, hath no regarde to soo greate and soo wonderfull a spectacle¹.

The wyttes therefore of the Vtopians, inured and exercysed in learnynge, be maruelous quycke in the inuentyon of feates, helpynge annye thyng to the aduantage and wealthe of lyffe. Howebeit, ii. feates theye maye thanke vs for; that is, the scyence of imprintyng, and the crafte of makynge paper: and yet not onelye vs but chyefelye and pryncypallye themselves. For when wee shewed to them Aldus² hys prynte in bookes of paper, and told them

^a with great affeccion intentiuely to.

^b [saye . . . beare] he beareth (say they).

^c brute beast.

artificum arbitrantur mundi huius uisendam machinam homini (quem solum tantae rei capacem fecit) exposuisse spectandam, Contemplatio
 naturae. eoque chariorem habere curiosum ac sollicitum inspectorem, operisque sui admiratorem, quam eum qui, uelut animal, expers mentis, tantum ac tam mirabile spectaculum stupidus immotusque neglexerit.

Vtopiensium itaque literis ingenia mire ualent ad inuentiones artium, quae faciant aliquid | ad commodae uitae compendia. Sed 118 duas tamen debent nobis, Chalcographorum et faciendae chartae; nec solis tamen nobis sed sibi quoque bonam eius partem. Nam quum ostenderemus eis libris chartaceis impressas ab Aldo literas, et de

¹ Mr. St. John aptly compares with this the fine passage in Cicero, De Nat. Deor. ii. §§ 37, 38, in which, after translating from Aristotle, he continues, in a similar strain to More: 'Licet enim . . . oculis quodammodo contemplari pulchritudinem earum rerum, quas divina providentia dicimus constitutas.'

² The recent death of Aldus Manutius the elder, in April 1515, was probably fresh in More's recollection of the stuffe wher of paper is made, and of the feat of grauyng letters, speakyng sumwhat more¹ then wee colde playnlye declare (for there was none of vs that knewe perfectlye other the one or the other), they furthwyth verye wyttelye coniectured the thyng. And where as before they wrote onelye in skynnes, in barkes of tryes, and in rides², now they haue attempted to make paper and to imprint letters. And thoughe at the fyrste yt proued not all of the beste, yet by often assayinge the same they shortelye gott the feate of bothe; and haue so broughte the matter abowte, that yf they had copyes of Greeke authores, they coulde lacke no bookes. But nowe they haue no moore then I rehearsed before; sauynge that by pryntyng of bookes they haue multyplied and increased the same into manye thowsande of copyes.

Who soeuer cummeth thether to see the lande, beyng excellente in annye gyfte of wytte, or throughe muche and longe iournyng well experiensed and sene in the knowchartae faciendae materia, ac literas imprimendi facultate loqueremur aliquid magis quam explicaremus (neque enim quisquam erat nostrum qui alterutram calleret), ipsi statim acutissime coniecerunt rem; et quum ante pellibus, corticibus, ac papyro tantum scriberent, iam chartam ilico facere et literas imprimere tentarunt: quae quum primo non satis procederent, eadem saepius experiendo breui sunt utrumque consecuti; tantumque effecerunt, ut, si essent Graecorum exemplaria librorum, codices deesse non possent. At nunc nihil habent amplius quam a me commemoratum est. id uero quod habent impressis iam libris in multa exemplariorum millia propagare.

Quisquis eo spectandi gratia uenerit, quem insignis aliqua dos ingenii, aut longa peregrinatione usum multarum cognitio terrarum when he wrote this.—See Renouard, Annales de l'Imprimerie des Alde, 1803, i. p. 123 n.

¹ If this were the meaning, it would be a genuine touch of human nature—ignorance seeking to veil itself under a cloud of words. But the Latin simply means 'talking something about it, rather than explaining.'

² That is, reeds, such as the papyrus.

ledge of manye countreys (for the whyche cause wee were verve welcome to them), hym they receyue and interteyne wonders gentyllye and louynglye ; for they haue delyte to heare what ys done in euerye lande. Howebeit, verve few marchaunte men come thither. For what shoulde they brynge thither ? onles yt were Iron, or els golde and syluer ; whiche they hadde rathere carrye home agayne. Also suche thynges as arre to be caryed owte of their lande, they thynke yt more wysedome to carrye that geer furthe themselves, then that othere shoulde come thether to fetche yt¹ ; to thentente they maye the better knowe the owte landes of euerye syde^a them, and kepe in vre² the feat and knowledge of saylinge.

^a syde of.

commendet (quo nomine gratus fuit noster appulsus) pronis animis excipitur. Quippe libenter audiunt quid ubique terrarum geratur. Caeterum mercandi gratia non admodum frequenter appellitur. Quid enim ferrent, nisi aut ferrum, aut, quod quisque referre mallet, aurum argentumue? Tum quae ex ipsis exportanda sint, ea consultius putant ab se efferi quam ab aliis illinc peti ; quo et caeteras undique gentes | exploratiores habeant, neque maritimarum rerum usum ac 119 peritiam oblitum eant.

¹ That is, the Utopians prefer to ship their exports in their own bottoms, rather than wait for foreigners to come and take them.

² Use. See the Glossary.

Of Bonde=

men, sicke persons, wedlocke, and dy-uers other matters.

THEY nother make bondemen of prysoners taken in battayll, oneles yt be in battaylle that the fowghte themselves, nor^a bondemens chyldren, nor, to be shorte^b, annye man whome^c they canne gette owte of an othere countrey^d, thoughe he were theyre a bondeman; but other suche as amonge themselves for heynous offences be punnyshed wyth bondage, or elles suche as in the Cytyes of other landes for greate trespasses be condempned to deathe¹. And of thys sorte of bondemen they haue mooste stoore. For manye of them they brynge home, sumtymes payinge very lytle for them; yea, mooste commonlye gettynge them for gramercye². Thyestes sortes of bondemen they kepe not onelye in contynuall woorke

^a nor of.

^b shorte of.

^c annye suche as.

^d forreine countries.

DE SERVIS.

PRO seruis neque bello captos habent, nisi ab ipsis gesto, neque seruorum filios, neque denique quenquam quem apud alias gentes seruientem possent comparare, sed aut si cuius apud se flagitium in seruitium uertitur, aut quos apud exterarum urbium (quod genus multo frequentius est) admissum facinus destinauit supplicio. Eorum enim multos, interdum aestimatos uili, saepius etiam gratis imetratos auferunt. Haec seruorum genera non in opere solum perpetuo,

Mira huius gentis
aequitas.

¹ See the Introduction, p. li.

² That is, gratuitously. See the Glossary.

and laboure, but alsoo in bandes. But theyre owne men they handle hardeste, whome they judge more desperate, and to haue deseruede greater punnysshemente; bycause they, beyng so godlye broughte vp to vertue, in soo excellente a common wealthe, cowlde not for all that be refreyned from mysdoynge.

An other kynde of bondemen they haue, when a vyle drudge, beyng a poore laborer in an other cowntreie, dothe chewse of hys owne free wyll to be a bondeman amonge them. Thyes they handle^a and order honestelye, and entertheyne almooste as gentyllye, as theyre owne free cytizeyns; sauynge that they put them to a lytle more laboure, as thereto accustomed. Yf annye suche be dysposed to departe thens (whyche seldome ys seene) they nother holde hym agaynste hys wyll, nother sende hym awaye wyth emptye handes.

The sycke (as I sayde¹) they see to wyth greate affectyon, and lette nothyng at all passe, concernynge other Physycke or good dyete, wherby they may be restored agayne to theyre healte. Them that be sycke of incurable dyseases they comforte wyth syttyng by them, uerum etiam in uinculis habent; sed suos durius: quos eo deploratiores, ac deteriora meritis exempla censent, quod tam praeclara educatione ad uirtutem egregie instructi contineri tamen ab scelere non potuerint.

^a intreate.

Aliud seruorum genus est, quum alterius populi mediastinus quispiam laboriosus ac pauper elegerit apud eos sua sponte seruire. Hos honeste tractant, ac nisi quod laboris, ut pote consuetis, imponitur plusculum, non multo minus clementer ac ciues habent. uolentem discedere (quod non saepe fit) neque retinent inuitum neque inanem dimittunt.

Egrotantes, ut dixi, magno cum adfectu curant, nihilque prorsus omittunt, quo sanitati eos, uel medicinae uel uictus obseruatione, restituant. Quin insanabili morbo laborantes assidendo, colloquendo, adhibendo demum quae wyth talkynge wyth them, and, to be shorte, wyth all maner of helpes that maye be. But yf the dysease be not onelye vncurable, but also full of contynuall payne and anguyshe, then the priestes and the magistrates exhort the man, seyng he ys not able to doo annye dewtye of lyffe, and by ouerlyuing hys owne deathe is noysome and yrkesome to other, and greuouse to hymself; that he wyll determyne with hymselfe no longer to cheryshe that pestilent and peynefull dysease: and, seyng hys lyfe ys to hym but a tourmente, that he wyll nott bee vnwyllynge too dye, but rather take a good hope to hym, and other dyspatche hymselfe owte of that paynfull lyffe, as owte of a pryson or a racke of tormente, or elles suffer hym selfe wyllynglye to be rydde owte of yt by other¹. And in so doynge they tell hym he shal doo wyselye, seyng by hys deathe he shall lyse no commoditye, but ende hys payne.

De aegrotis.

¹ See above, p. 159.

possunt leuamenta, solantur. Caeterum si non immedicabilis modo morbus sit, uerumetiam perpetuo uexet atque discruciet, tum sacerdotes ac magistratus hortantur hominem, quandoquidem omnibus uitae muniis impar, aliis molestus ac sibi grauis, morti iam suae superuiuat, ne secum statuatur pestem diutius Mors spontanea. ac lucem alere, neue, quum tormentum ei uita sit, mori dubitet; quin bona spe fretus acerba illa uita uelut carcere atque aculeo uel ipse semet eximat, uel ab aliis eripi se sua uoluntate patiat. hoc illum, quum non commoda sed supplicium abrupturus

¹ The words of More to his daughter Margaret, when in the Tower: 'I believe, Meg, that they that have put me here ween that they have done me a high displeasure: but I assure thee on my faith, mine own good daughter, if it had not been for my wife and ye that be my children, I would not have failed long ere this to have closed myself in as strait a room, and straiter too,' were taken by Warner to imply that he would have been prepared, under certain circumstances, to carry out the recommendation in the text.

The true reference, however, can only be, as Father Bridgett points out (Life, pp. 25, 367) to the cell of a Carthusian monastery. A similar misinterpretation of the 'lowly bed' of Gray's Elegy is sometimes met with. It must be admitted, in Warner's defence, that the stoical doctrine of suicide, under certain limitations, is here presented in as attractive a form as it well could be. For the Christian view of the subject, see the authorities collected by Bishop Wordsworth in his note on Acts xvi. 27.

And bycause in that acte he shall followe the counsell of the pryestes, that is to saye of the interpreters of goddes wyll and pleasure, they shewe hym that he shall do lyke a godly and a vertuose man. They that be thus persuaded fynyshe theyre lyues wyllinglye, othere wyth hunger, or elles dye in theyre sleape¹ wythowte annye fealnige of deathe. But they cause none suche to dye agaynste hys wyll; nor they vse no lesse dilygence and attendaunce about hym; beleuyng² thys to be an honorable deathe. Elles he that kylleth hym selfe before that the pryestes and the counsell haue allowed the cause of hys deathe, hym, as vnworthy both of the earth and of fyer^a, they cast vnburied into some stinkyng marrish.

The woman is not maried before she be xviii. yeres olde. The man is^b iiii. yeres elder before he mary³. If other the man or the woman be proued to haue bodely^c offended, before their marriage, with an other⁴, he or she morte sit, prudenter facturum; quoniam uero sacerdotum in ea re consiliis, id est, interpretum dei, sit obsecuturus, etiam pie sancteque facturum. Haec quibus persuaserint, aut inedia sponte uitam finiunt, aut sopiti sine mortis sensu soluuntur. Inuitum uero neminem tollunt, nec officii erga eum quicquam imminuunt. persuasos hoc pacto defungi honorificum. Alioqui qui mortem sibi consciuerit causa non probata sacerdotibus et senatui, hunc neque terra neque igne dignantur; sed in paludem aliquam turpiter insepultus abiicitur.

^a [both . . . fyer] either to be buried, or with fier to be consumed.

^b is omitted.

^c actually.

Foemina non ante annum duodeuicesimum nubit. Mas non nisi De coniugiis. expletis quatuor etiam amplius. Ante coniugium mas aut foemina si conuincatur furtiuae libidinis, grauiter

¹ This would rather suggest a natural death. But the Latin, sopiti, implies that they would be sent to sleep, or, as Burnet plainly words it, 'take Opium.'

² Robynson apparently took persuasos as if persuasi, and connected it with the preceding clause. It is literally: 'for men to die in this way upon persuasion (that is, convinced by proper authority) is honourable.'

³ Compare the remarks on premature marriages in the Introduction, p. xxxiii.

⁴ This is an uncalled for addition by the translator.

whether it be^a is sharply punished; and both the offenders be forbidden ever after in all their life to marrye, onles the faulte be forgiven by the princes pardone. But bothe the good man and the good wyfe of the house where that offence was done^b, as beyng slacke and negligent in loking to there chardge, be in daunger of great reproche and infamye. That offence is so sharply punished, bicause they perceave, that onles they be diligently kept from the libertie of this vice, fewe wyll ioyne together in the loue of marriage¹; wherein all the life must be led with one, and also all the griefes and displeasures that come^c therewith must patiently be taken and borne.

Furthermore, in cheusing wyfes and husbandes they obserue earnestly and straitlye a custome whiche semed to vs very fonde and folysh. For a sad and an honest matrone sheweth the woman, be she maide or widdowe, naked to the wower. And lykewyse a sage and discrete man exhibyteth the wower naked to the woman. At ^a [he or . . . be] the partye that so hathe trespassed.

^b committed.

^c comming.

121 in eum eamue animaduertitur, coniugioque illis in totum interdicitur, nisi uenia principis noxam remiserit. sed et pater et materque^a familias cuius in domo admissum flagitium est, tanquam suas partes parum diligenter tutati, magnae obiacent infamiae. id facinus ideo tam seuerè uindicant, quod futurum prospiciunt, ut rari in coniugalem amorem coalescerent², in quo aetatem omnem cum uno uideant exigendam, et perferendas insuper quas ea res affert molestias, nisi a uago concubitu diligenter arceantur.

Porro in deligendis coniugibus ineptissimum ritum (uti nobis uisum est) adprimeque ridiculum, illi serio ac seuerè obseruant. Mulierem enim, seu uirgo seu uidua sit, grauis et honesta matrona proco nudam exhibet; ac probus aliquis uir uicissim nudum puellae procum sistit. Hunc

Etsi parum uerecunde haud tamen incaute.

^a Sic etiam A.; B. omittit que.

¹ This argument is enforced by Paley: Moral Philosophy, Bk. iii. ch. 2. The Utopian communism, unlike Plato's, did not extend to community of wives.

² Should be coalescant.

this custome we laughed and disalowed it as foolyshe¹. But they on the other part doo greatlye wonder at the follye of all other nations, whyche in byinge a colte, where as a lytle money is in hassarde, be so charye and circumspecte, that though he be almoste all bare, yet they wyll not bye hym, oneles the saddel and all the harneys be taken of, leaste vnder those couerynges be hydde som galle or soore; and yet in chewsynge a wyfe, whyche shalbe other pleasure or dyspleasure to them all their lyfe after, they be so recheles, that, all the resydewe of the wooman's bodye beinge couered wyth clothes, they esteeme here scaselye be one handebredeth (for they can se no more but her face); and so do^a ioyne her to them not without great ieoperdie of euell agreing together, if any thynge in her body afterwarde do offende^b and myslyke them. For all men be not so wyse as to haue respecte to the vertuous condicions of the partie; and the endowmentes of the bodye cause the vertues of the mynde more

^a to.^b should chaunce to offende.

morem quum uelut ineptum ridentes improbaremus, illi contra caeterarum omnium gentium insignem demirari stultitiam, qui quum in equuleo comparando, ubi de paucis agitur nummis, tam cauti sint, ut, quamuis fere nudum, nisi detracta sella tamen omnibusque reuulsis ephippiis, recusent emere, ne sub illis operculis hulus aliquod delitesceret; in deligenda coniuge, qua ex re aut uoluptas aut nausea sit totam per uitam comitatura, tam negligenter agant, ut, reliquo corpore uestibus obuoluto, totam mulierem uix ab unius palmae spatio (nihil enim praeter uultum uisitur) aestiment, adiungantque sibi non absque magno (si quid offendat postea) male cohaerendi periculo. Nam neque omnes tam sapientes sunt ut solos mores respiciant, et in ipsorum quoque | sapientum coniugiis ad 122

¹ Burton, in his Anatomy of Melancholy (Part III, sec. 3, mem. 4, subs. 2), quotes this fancy of More's, and compares it with one of the institutions of Lycurgus (Plutarch's Lives,

tr. by the Langhorne, 1805, i. p. 139). Bacon, in his New Atlantis (ed. by St. John, p. 248), also refers to it, and devises what he thinks a better expedient.

to be esteemed and regarded, yea, euen in the mariages of wyse men. Verely so fowle deformitie may be hydde vnder thoes coueringes, that it maye quite alienate and take awaye the mans mynde from his wyfe, when it shal not be lawfull for their bodies to be seperate agayne. If suche deformitie happen by any chaunce after the mariage is consumate and finyshed; well, there is no remedie but patience. Euery man must take his fortune, well a worthe.¹ But it were well done that a lawe were made, wherebye all suche deceytes myghte be eschewed and aduoyded before hand. And thys were they constreyned more earnestlye to looke vpon, because they onlye of the nations in that parte of the worlde bee contente euerye man wyth one wyfe a piece; and matrymoney is there neuer broken, but by death; excepte adulterye breake the bonde, or els the intollerable waiward maners of eyther partie. For if either of them fynde themselfe for any suche cause greued; they maye by the licence of the councell chaunge and take an other. But the other partie lyueth euer after in infamye and out of wedlocke. But animi uirtutes non nihil additamenti corporis etiam dotes adiciunt. certe tam foeda deformitas latere sub illis potest inuolucris, ut alienare prorsus animum ab uxore queat, quum corpore iam seiungi non liceat. Qualis deformitas si quo casu contingat post contractas nuptias, suam quisque sortem necesse^a ferat: ante uero ne quis capiatur insidiis legibus caueri debet; idque tanto maiore studio fuit curandum^b, quod et soli illarum orbis plagarum singulis sunt contenti coniugibus, et matrimonium ibi haud saepe aliter quam morte soluitur, nisi adulterium in causa fuerit, aut morum non Diuortium.

 ferenda molestia. Nempe alterutri sic offenso facta ab senatu coniugis mutandi uenia: alter infamem simul ac caelibem perpetuo uitam ducit. Alioquin inuitam coniugem, cuius nulla sit

^a necesse est, A.

^b om. A.

¹ There is nothing in the Latin to show in what sense this exclamation was meant to be used. On the analogy of 'wellaway,' and 'woe worth,' it will be an exclamation of sorrow: 'alas! that it should be so.'

for the ^a husbände to put away his wyfe for no ^b faulte, but for that some myshappe is fallen to her bodye, thys by no meanes they wyll suffre. For they iudge it a greate poynte of crueltie that any body in their moste nede of helpe and comforte, shoulde be cast of and forsaken; and that olde age, whych both bryngeth sycknes with it, and is a syckenes it selfe¹, should vnkyndlye and vnfaythfullye be delte withall. But nowe and then it chaunseth, where as the man and the woman cannot well agree betwene themselves, bothe of them fyndyng other with whome they hope to lyue more quyetye and meryly, that they by the full consent of them both be diuorsed a sonder and newe maried to other²; but that not without the auctoritie of the councell; which agreeth to no dyuorses, before they and their wyfes haue diligently tried and examyned the matter. Yea and then also they be loth to consent to noxa, repudiare, quod corporis obtigerit calamitas, id uero nullo pacto ferunt. nam et crudele iudicant tum quenquam deseri, cum maxime eget solatio, et senectuti, quum et morbos afferat et morbus ipsa sit, incertam atque infirmam fidem fore. Caeterum accidit interdum ut quum non satis inter se coniugum conueniant mores, repertis utrique aliis quibus cum sperent se suauius esse uicturos, amborum sponte separati noua matrimonia contrahant, haud absque senatus auctoritate tamen, qui nisi causa per se atque uxores suas diligenter cognita diuortia non admittit. Imo ne sic quidem facile, quod rem minime

^a Howbeit the.

^b no other.

¹ The thought is from Terence, Phormio, iv. 1:

‘CH. Pol me detinuit morbus. DE.

Unde? aut qui? CH. Rogas?

Senectus ipsa est morbus.’

² Milton contended in earnest for what More here makes the Utopians allow, protesting vehemently against the law which continued to bind together a married couple, although ‘through their different tempers, thoughts, and constitutions, they can neither be to one another a remedy against loneliness, nor live in any union or contentment all their days.’

He is careful to guard against its being thought ‘that licence, and levity, and unconsented breach of faith should herein be countenanced; but that some conscionable and tender pity might be had of those who have unwarily, in a thing they never practised before, made themselves the bondmen of a luckless and helpless matrimony.’ See the Preface to The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce.

it, because they knowe thys to be the nexte waye to breke loue betwene man and wyfe, to be in easye hope of a newe mariage.

Breakers of wedlocke be punyshed with moste greuous bondage. And if both the offenders were married, then the partyes whiche in that behalfe haue suffered wronge be diuorsed from the auoutrers if they wyll, and be married together^a, or els to whom they luste. But if eyther of them both do styll contynewe in loue towarde so vnkynde a bedfellowe, the vse of wedlocke is not to them forbydden, if the partie^b be disposed to followe in toylinge and drudgerye the person, which for that offence is condempned to bondage. And very ofte¹ it chaunceth that the repentaunce of the one, and the earnest diligence of the other, dothe so moue the prince with pytie and compassion, that he restoreth the bonde persone from seruitude to libertie and fredom again. But if the same partie be taken eftsones in that faulte, there is no other way but death.

To other trespaces there is^c no prescript punyshment appoynted by anye lawe. But accordinge to the hey-

^a [be diuorsed . . . together] beinge diuorsed from the auoutrers, be married together, if they will.

^b partie faulteles.

^c [there is no] no . . . is.

123 utilem sciunt firmandae | coniugum charitati, facilem nouarum nuptiarum spem esse propositam.

Temeratores coniugii grauissima seruitute plectuntur; et, si neuter erat caelebs, iniuriam passi (uelint modo) repudiatis adulteris coniugio inter se ipsi iunguntur; alioquin quibus uidebitur. At si laesorum alteruter erga tam male merentem coniugem in amore persistat, tamen uti coniugii lege non prohibetur, si uelit in opera damnatum sequi: acciditque interdum ut alterius poenitentia, alterius officiosa sedulitas, miserationem commouens principi, libertatem rursus impetret. Caeterum ad scelus iam relapso nex infligitur.

Caeteris facinoribus nullam certam poenam lex ullá praestituit,

¹ Lat. interdum, not so much as 'very ofte;' but rather, 'now and then.'

nousenes of the offence, or contrarye, so the punyshe-mente is moderated by the discretion of the councell.
The husbandes chastice their wyfes¹; and the parentes their chyldren; ones they haue done anye so horryble an offence, that the open punyshement thereof maketh much for the aduancement of honeste maners. But moste commenlye the moste heynous faultes be punyshed with the incommoditie of bondage. For that they suppose to be to the offenders no lesse grieffe, and to the common wealth more profitable^a, then if they should hastely put them to death, and make them^b out of the waye. For there cummeth more profite of their labour, then of their deathe; and by their example they feare other the lenger from lyke offences. But if they, beinge thus vsed, doo rebell and kicke agayne, then forsothe they be slayne as desperace^c and wilde beastes, whom nother pryson nor chayne could restraine and kepe vnder. But they whiche take their bondage patientlye be not left all hopeles.
For after they haue bene broken and tamed with longe

^a profit.^b and so make them quite.^c so, for desperate.

sed ut quodque atrox aut contra uisum est, ita supplicium senatus decernit. Vxores mariti castigant, et parentes liberos; nisi quid tam ingens admiserint, ut id publice puniri morum intersit. sed fere grauissima quaeque scelera seruitutis incommodo puniuntur; id siquidem et sceleratis non minus triste et reipublicae magis commodum arbitrantur, quam si mactare noxios et protenus amoliri festinent. Nam et labore quam nece magis prosunt, et exemplo diutius alios ab simili flagitio deterrent. quod si sic habiti rebellent atque recalcitent, tum demum uelut indomitae beluae, quos cohercere carcer et catena non potest, trucidantur. At patientibus non adimitur omnis omnino spes. quippe longis domiti | malis si eam poenitentiam prae se ferant, quae 124

Aestimatio
supplicii penes magistratum.

¹ In England it was long supposed to be the law that a man might chastise his wife, so it be in moderation, and with a stick no thicker than his thumb. See Dalton: The Countrey Justice, ed. 1705, p. 284. But 'modern law recognizes no such right, and a husband is not justified in beating his wife, even though she be drunk or insolent.' See The American and English Encyclopaedia of Law, vol. ix. (1889), p. 815, and the authorities there quoted.

myseries, yf then they shewe suche repentaunce, wherebye^a it maye be perceaued that they be soryer for their offence then for their punyshement, sumtymes by the Prynces prerogatyue, and sumtymes by the voyce and consent of the people, their bondage other is mitigated, or els cleane remytted and forgeuen¹. He that moueth to² aduoutrye is in no lesse daunger and ieoperdie, then yf he hadde committed aduoutrye in dede. For in all offences they counte the intente and pretended purpose as euell as the acte or dede it selfe³. For they thynke^b that no lette owghte to excuse hym, that dyd hys beste too haue no lette.

They sette greate store by^c fooles⁴. And as it is^d greate reproche to do to^e annye of them hurte or iniury, so they prohibite not to take pleasure of foolyshnes. For that, they thynke, doth mucche good to the fooles. And if any man be so sadde and sterne, that he cannot laughe nother at their wordes nor at their dedes, none of them

^a as therebye.

^b Thinking.

^c [sette . . . by] haue singular delite and pleasure in.

^d is a.

^e to omitted.

peccatum testetur magis eis displicere quam poenam, principis interdum praerogatiua, interdum suffragiis populi, aut mitigatur seruitus aut remittitur. Sollicitasse ad stuprum nihilo minus quam stuprasse periculi est. In omni siquidem flagitio Stupri sollicitati poena. certum destinatumque conatum aequant facto. neque enim id quod deficit ei putant prodesse debere, per quem non stetit quominus nihil defuerit.

Moriones in delitiis habentur, quos ut affecisse contumeliis magno in probro est, ita uoluptatem ab stultitia capere non Voluptas e morionibus. uetant. Siquidem id morionibus ipsis maximo esse bono censent, cuius⁵ qui tam seuerus ac tristis est ut nullum

¹ See the note above, p. 71.

² Not in the sense of inciting others to, but of attempting.

³ St. Matt. v. 28.

⁴ The reader will at once recall More's own fancy for a morio, in the person of Henry Pattinson, who is introduced into Holbein's sketch of the family of Sir Thomas More. See Jortin's Erasmus, i. p. 175, and Bridgett's Life, p. 126.

⁵ Cuius appears to refer, by a rather harsh change of number, to morionis, supplied from the preceding morionibus.

be commytted to his tuition; for feare lest he would not ordre^a them gentilly and fauorably enough, to whom they should brynge no delectation (for other goodnes in them is none); muche lesse any proffyt shoulde they yelde hym.

To mocke a man for hys deformitie, or for that he lacketh anye parte or lymme of hys bodye, is counted greate dishonestie and reproche, not to hym that is mocked, but to hym that mocketh¹; which vnwysely doth imbrayde² any man of that as a vice, whiche was not in his powre to eschewe. Also as they counte and reken very lyttell wytte to be in hym that regardeth not naturall bewtie and comlines, so to helpe the same with payntinges is taken for a vayne and a wanton pryde, not without great infamy³. For they knowe euen by verye experience, that no comelines of bewtie doth so hyghly commende and auauance the wyues in the conceyte of there husbandes, as honest conditions and lowlines. For as loue is oftentimes wonne with bewtie, so it is not kept, preserued, and continued⁴, but by vertue and obedience.

^a intreate.

neque factum neque dictum rideat, ei tutandum non credunt, ueriti ne non satis indulgenter curetur ab eo, cui non modo nulli usui, sed ne oblectamento quidem (qua sola dote ualent) futurus esset.

Irridere deformem aut mutilum turpe ac deforme non ei qui ridetur habetur, sed irrisori, qui cuiquam, quod in eius potestate non erat ut fugeret, id uitii loco stulte exprobet. Vt enim formam naturalem non tueri segniter atque inertiter ducunt, sic adiuuentum

Fucata forma. ab fucis quaerere infamis apud illos insolentia est.

Vsu enim ipso sentiunt, quam non ullum formae decus uxores, aequae ac morum probitas et reuerentia, commendat maritis. Nam ut forma nonnulli sola capiuntur, ita nemo nisi uirtute atque obsequio retinetur.

¹ Such a one as Persius describes: . . . 'Iusco possit qui dicere Iusce.'

² Upbraid. See the Glossary.

³ More has an epigram 'In anum fucis frustra utentem,' ending 'numquam Hecubem haec facient Helenen.'

⁴ All this is for retinetur. For the sentiment, compare More's charming lines

They do not only feare their people from doinge euell by punishmentes, but also allure them to vertue with rewardes of honoure. Therefore they set vp in the market place the ymages of notable men¹, and of such as haue bene great and bountefull benefactors to the common wealth, for the perpetual memorie of their good actes; and also that the glory and renowme of the auncetors may sturre and prouoke their posteritie to vertue. He that inordinatlie and ambitiously desireth promotions, is lefte all hopeles for euer atteynnyng any promotion as longe as he liueth. They lyue together louingly. For no magistrate is other hawte or ferefull. Fathers they be called, and lyke fathers they vse themselves. The citezens (as it is their dewtie) do^a willingly exhibite vnto them dewe honoure, without any compulsion. Nor the prince hymselfe is not knowen from the other by his apparel, nor by a crown or diademe^b or cappe of main-

^a do omitted.

^b [by his . . . diademe] by princely apparel, or a robe of state, nor by a crown or diademe roial.

- 125 Non poenis tantum deterrent a flagitiis, sed | propositis quoque honoribus ad uirtutes inuitant. ideoque statuas uiris insignibus et de republica praeclare meritis in foro collocant, in rerum bene gestarum memoriam, simul ut ipsorum posteris maiorum suorum gloria calcar et incitamentum ad uirtutem sit. Qui magistratum ullum ambierit, exspes omnium redditur. Conuiuant amabiliter, quippe nec magistratus ullus insolens aut terribilis est. patres appellantur et exhibent². iisdem defertur, ut debet, ab uolentibus honor, non ab inuitis exigitur. Ne principem quidem ipsum uestis aut diadema, sed

Et praemiis
inuitandi ciues
ad officium.

Damnatus ambitus. Honor
magistratum.
Dignitas
principis.

‘Ad Candidum: qualis uxor deligenda.’

‘That is true love,’ he says, ‘which Virtutis inclytæ
(Quæ certa permanens
Non febre decedit,
Annisue deperit)
Respectus efficit.’

¹ The ‘image’ of More himself has of late years been so set up in his native city, though not yet in a manner worthy of him. See the Introduction, p. xviii. n.

² An ellipsis of se.

tenaunce¹, but by a littell sheffe of corne caried before hym. And so a taper of wax is borne befor the byshop², whereby onely he is knowen.

Thei haue but few lawes. For to people so instructe and institute very fewe do suffice. Yea this thyng they chieflye reprove amonge other nations, that innumerable bokes of lawes and expositions vpon the same be not sufficient³. But they thinke it against al right and iustice, that men shuld be bound to thoes lawes, whiche other be in nombre mo then be able to be readde, or els blinder and darker, then that any man can well vnderstande them. Furthermore they vtterly exclude and bannyshe all^a proc-tours and sergeauntes at the lawe⁴, which craftely handell matters, and subtely dispute of the lawes. For they gestatus frumenti manipulus discernit, ut pontificis insigne est praelatus cereus.

^a all attorneis.

Leges habent perquam paucas, sufficiunt enim sic institutis paucis-simae. Quin hoc in primis apud alios improbant

Leges paucae. populos, quod legum interpretumque uolumina non infinita sufficiunt. Ipsi uero censent iniquissimum, ullos homines his obligari legibus, quae aut numerosiores sint quam ut perlegi queant, aut obscuriores quam ut a quouis possint intel-ligi. porro causidicos, qui causas tractent callide ac leges uafre

¹ The 'cap of maintenance,' or 'cap of dignity,' was a cap of crimson velvet, lined with ermine, originally assigned only to dukes. The name is said to be derived from its having been 'borne in the hand' by a distinguished captive, in the train of the victorious general who owned it. See the Dic-tionaries. In the Latin text, however, there is nothing but diadema to answer to Robynson's triplet.

² See below, p. 294.

³ This is a stock complaint. The juriconsults have their share in the Praise of Folly. as those who 'sex-centas leges eodem spiritu contextunt, nihil refert quam ad rem pertinentes;' and who 'glossematis glossemata, opinionones opinionibus cumulantes, efficiunt ut studium illud omnium difficillimum esse videatur.'—Moriae Encom., ed. 1668, p. 144.

⁴ This is Robynson's expansion of the single term causidicos. 'Proctor' is Chaucer's 'procuratour':—

'May I not axe a libel, sire sompnour, And answer there by my procura-tour?'

thinke it most mete, that euery man shuld pleade his owne matter, and tell the same tale before the iudge, that he would tel to his man of lawe. So shall there be lesse circumstaunce of wordes, and the trewth shal soner cum to light; whiles the iudge with a discrete iudgement doth waye the wordes of hym whom no lawiër hath instruct with deceit; and whiles he helpeth and beareth out simple wittes agaynst the false and malicious circumuertions of craftie chyldren¹. This is harde to be obserued in other countreis, in so infinitie a nombre of bylnd and intricate lawes. But in Vtopia euery man is a cunningy lawiër. For, as I sayde, they haue verye fewe lawes; and the playnner and grosser that anye interpretation is, that they allowe as most iuste. For all lawes (saye they) bee made and publysshed onelye to thenthente, that by them euerye man shoulde be put in remembraunce of hys dewtye. But the craftye and subtyll interpretation disputent, prorsus omnes excludunt. censent enim ex usu esse ut suam quisque causam agat, eademque referat iudici quae narraturus patrono fuerat. Sic et minus am- Aduocatorum inutilis turba.

bagum fore et facilius elici ueritatem, dum, eo dicente quem nullus patronus fucum docuit, iudex solerter expendit singula, et contra uersutorum calumnias simplicioribus ingeniis opitulatur.

126 haec apud | alias gentes in tanto perplexissimarum aceruo legum difficile est obseruari. Caeterum apud eos unusquisque est legis peritus. Nam et sunt (ut dixi) paucissimae; et interpretationum praeterea ut quaeque est maxime crassa, ita maxime aequam censent. Nempe quum omnes leges (inquiunt) ea tantum causa promulgentur, ut ab hiis quisque sui commonefiat officii, subtilior interpretatio pau-

¹ That is, 'people,' as constantly in the Bible. Comp. 'obedient children' (1 Pet. i. 14), &c. More elsewhere recommends trusting to the summary jurisdiction of a judge. 'Though maister More saye, that he neuer saw the day yet, but that he durst as well trust the truth of one iudge as of two iuries,' is a statement in The Debellation of Salem and Byzance. See also Father

Bridgett's note in Wisdom and Wit, p. 179; and for one cause of the corruption of juries, see the Discourse of the Common Weal, before quoted, Appendix to Introduction, p. lix: 'Somme founde the meanes to haue ther seruantes sworne in the Juryes, to thynntent to haue them hasarde ther soules to saue ther gredynes.'

of them can^a put verve fewe in that remembraunce (for they be but fewe that do perceave them); where as the simple, the plaine, and grosse meaning of the lawes is open to euerye man. Els as touchynge the vulgare sorte of the people, whiche be bothe moste in numbere, and haue moste neade to knowe their dewties, were it not as good for them that no lawe were made at all, as, when it is made, to brynge so blynde an interpretacion vpon it, that without greate witte and longe arguynge no man can discusse it? to the findinge out whereof nother the grosse iudgement of the people can attayne, nother the hole lyfe of them that be occupied in woorkynge for their lyuynge can suffyse therto¹.

This vertues of the Vtopians haue caused their nexte neyghbours and borderers, whiche lyue fre and vnder no subiection (for the Vtopians longe agoo haue delyuered manye of them from tyrannye), to take magistrates of them, some for a yeare, and some for fyue yeares space. Whiche, when the tyme of their office is expired, they brynge home agayn with honoure and prayse; and take newe ons^b agayne wyth them into their countrey. This cissimos admonet (pauci enim sunt qui assequantur), quum interim simplicior ac magis obuius legum sensus omnibus in aperto sit. alioquin, quod ad uulgus attinet, cuius et maximus est numerus et maxime eget admonitu, quid referat utrum legem omnino non condas, an conditam in talem interpreteris sententiam, quam nisi magno ingenio et longa disputatione nemo possit eruere, ad quam inuestigandam neque crassum uulgi iudicium queat attingere, neque uita in comparando uictu occupata sufficere.

^a [them can] them (for as muche as few can atteyne therto) canne.

^b ons omitted.

Hiis eorum uirtutibus incitati finitimi, qui quidem liberi sunt et suae spontis (multos enim ipsi iam olim tyrannide liberauerunt) magistratus sibi ab illis, alii quotannis, alii in lustrum impetrant; quos defunctos imperio cum honore ac laude reducunt, nouosque secum rursus in patriam reuehunt. Atque hi quidem populi optime profecto nations haue vndowtedlye verye well and holsomlye pro-uydedy for their common wealthes. For seyng that bothe the making and the marrynge of the weale publique doth depende and hange of^a the maners of the rulers and magistrates, what officers coulde they more wyselye haue chosen, then thoes whiche cannot be ledde from honestye by brybes¹ (for to them that shortlye after shall departe thens into theyre owne countreye money shoulde be vnprofytable); nor yet be moued other with fauour or malyce towardes annye man, as beyng straungers and vnaquainted with the people? The which twoo vices of affection² and auryce where they take place in iudgementes, incontynente they breake iustice, the strongeste and suereste bonde of a common wealth³.

¹ See Budé's letter, above, pp. lxxx — xcii.

 Thies peoples, whiche fetche their officers and rulers from them, the Vtopians cal their fellowes; and other, to whome they haue bene beneficiall, they call their frendes.

^a vpon.

ac saluberrime reipublicae suae consulunt: cuius et salus et perniciquum ab moribus magistratuum pendeat, quos nam potuissent ele-127 gisse⁴ prudentius, quam qui | neque ullo precio queant ab honesto deduci (utpote quod breui sit remigraturis inutile) ignoti ciuibus, aut prauo cuiusquam studio aut similtate flecti. Quae duo mala, affectus atque auaritia⁵, sicubi incubuere iudiciis, illico iustitiam omnem, fortissimum reipublicae neruum, dissoluunt. Hos Vtopiani populos, quibus qui imperent ab ipsis petuntur, appellant socios, caeteros quos beneficiis auxerunt amicos uocant.

¹ For More's own practice in this respect see the anecdotes in Roper's Life (ed. 1822, pp. 61, 62).

² 'Affection' here denotes the 'being moved with favour or malice' towards anyone, just described; in other words, partiality or bias. The Latin affectus sometimes has the same sense, as in Quintil. vi. 2, 'inducere iudicem in affectus.' Shakspeare uses the word similarly in Merchant of Venice, iv. 1:—

'For affection,

Master of passion, sways it to the mood

Of what it likes or loathes.'

³ The second title of Plato's Republic, it will be remembered, is Concerning Justice.

⁴ For eligere. See note above, p. 111.

⁵ Should rather have been the nominative, in apposition to mala.

As towchyng leages, which in other places betwene countrey and countrey be so ofte concluded, broken, and made agayne^a, they neuer make none with anye nacion¹. For to what purpose serue leagues? saye they; as though nature had not set sufficient loue betwene man and man. And who so regardeth not nature, thynke yowe that he wyll passe for wordes? They be brought into thys opinion chiefly bicause that in thoes parties of the wordle leagues betwene princes be wont to be kept and obserued very slenderly. For here in Europa, and especiallye in thies partes, where the faythe and religion of Christe reygne, the maiestie of leagues is euerye where esteemed holly and inuiolable; partlye through the iustice and goodnes of princes, and partelye through the reuerence of great byshoppes^{b2}. Whyche, lyke as they make ^a renewed. ^b [through . . . byshoppes] at the reuerence and motion of the head byshoppes.

Foedera, quae reliquae inter se gentes toties ineunt, frangunt ac renouant, ipsi nulla cum gente ferunt. Quorsum enim De foederibus. foedus, inquit, quasi non hominem homini satis natura conciliet; quam qui contempserit, hunc uerba scilicet putes curaturum? In hanc sententiam eo uel maxime trahuntur, quod in illis terrarum plagis foedera pactaque principum solent parum bona fide seruari. Etenim in Europa, idque his potissimum partibus quas CHRISTI fides et religio possidet, sancta est et inuiolabilis ubique maiestas foederum, partim ipsa iustitia et bonitate principum, partim summorum reuerentia metuque pontificum, qui ut

¹ On this subject, see the Introduction, p. xxxii.

² Robynson seems to have stuck at the words 'metuque pontificum,' as will be seen from the reading of his second edition, where he evidently took metu for motu. In a former passage (sup. p. 8) he appears in like manner to have hesitated about rendering pontifices by Popes, which is a common use of the word in More. So Burnet: 'Which is partly owing to the Justice and Goodness of the Princes themselves, and partly to the Reverence they pay to the Popes: Who, as they are most religious Observers of their own Promises, so they exhort all other Princes to perform theirs.' On the part taken by Pope Julius II in the League of Cambray and afterwards, which is probably what More had most in view, see Tytler: History of Scotland, 1864, ii. p. 281, and Brewer: Reign of Henry VIII, i. p. 12.

no promysse themselves, but they doo verye religiouslye perfourme the same, so they exhorte all prynces in any wyse to abyde by theyre promisses; and them that refuse or denye so to do, by their pontificall powre and aucthoritie they compell therto¹. And surely they thynke well that it myght seme a verye reprochefull thyng, yf in the leagues of them, whyche by a peculiare name be called faythfull, faythe shoulde haue no place.

But in that newefonnde parte of the worlde, whiche is scaselye so farre from vs beyonde the lyne equinoctiall, as owre lyfe and manners be dissidente from theirs, no truste nor confydence is in leagues. But² the mo and holyer cerymonies the league is knytte vp with, the soner it is broken, by some cauillation founde in the wordes; whyche manye tymes of purpose be so craftelye put in and placed, that the bandes can neuer be so sure nor so stronge, but they wyll fynde some hole open to crepe nihil in se recipiunt ipsi, quod non religiosissime praestant, ita caeteros omnes principes iubent ut pollicitis omnibus modis immorentur, tergiversantes uero pastoralis censura et seueritate compellunt. Merito sane censent turpissimam rem uideri si illorum foederibus absit fides qui peculiari nomine fideles appellantur.

At in illo nouo orbe terrarum, quem circulus aequator uix tam
 128 longe | ab hoc nostro orbe semouet, quam uita moresque dissident, foederum nulla fiducia est; quorum ut quoque^a plurimis ac sanctissimis ceremoniis innodatum fuerit, ita citissime soluitur, inuenta facile in uerbis calumnia, quae sic interim de industria dictant callide, ut nunquam tam firmis adstringi uinculis queant, quin elabantur aliqua,

^a quodque, A. recte.

¹ With this sarcastic contrast of the ideal with the real, compare the strictures of Erasmus, in a similar strain, on the conduct of Christian Kings and Popes, in his Adagia, under the headings Imperitia and Simulatio et Dissimulatio (ed. 1629, pp. 301, 655).

² This way of beginning a fresh sentence dislocates the meaning, by appearing to make the conduct here described to be the practice of the Utopians; as if they broke treaties the more quickly, the more solemnly they were concluded. Burnet's rendering gives what I take to be the same wrong impression. The Latin simply means: 'there is no confidence in treaties; which are speedily broken,'—that is, which in the old world are so broken.

owte at¹, and to breake bothe league and trewth. The whiche crafty dealyng, yea, the whiche fraude and deceyte, yf they shoulde knowe it to bee practysed amonge pryuate men in their bargaynes and contractes, they woulde incontinent crye owte at it with a^a sower countenance, as an offence most detestable, and worthie to be punnyshed with a shamefull death; yea, euen verie they² that auance themselves authours of like counsell geuen to princes. Wherefore it maye well be thought other that all iustice is but a basse and a lowe vertue, and whiche aualeth it self³ farre vnder the hyghe dignitie of kynges; or, at the least wyse, that there be two iustices; the one mete for the inferioure sorte of the people, goinge a fote and crepyng by lowe on the^b grounde, and bounde downe on euery side with many bandes, because it shall not run at rouers: the other a pryncely vertue, whiche lyke as it is of muche hygher maiestie then the other poore iustice, so also it is of muche more lybertie, as to the whiche nothings is vnlawful that it lusteth after.

^a with an open mouth and a.

^b lowe by the.

foedusque et fidem pariter eludant. Quam uafriciem, imo quam fraudem dolumque, si priuatorum deprehenderent interuenisse contractui, magno supercilio rem sacrilegam et furca dignam clamitarent hi nimirum ipsi, qui eius consilii principibus dati semet gloriantur autores. Quo fit ut iustitia tota uideatur aut non nisi plebea uirtus et humilis, quaeque longo interuallo subsidat infra regale fastigium, aut uti saltem duae sint, quarum altera uulgus deceat, pedestris et humirepa, neue usquam septa transilire queat, multis undique restricta uinculis; altera principum uirtus, quae sicuti sit quam illa popularis augustior, sic est etiam longo interuallo liberior, ut cui nihil^a non liceat nisi quod non libeat.

^a om. A.

¹ Here again, Robynson and Burnet ('but they will find some Loophole,' &c.) convey the impression that this is what the Utopians do. The metaphor in the Latin is taken from tying up a parcel, which in such hands can never be so securely fastened, 'but that some things slip out, and baffle alike treaty and trust.'

² Latin, hi ipsi. Compare the French même eux.

³ That is, sinks. See the Glossary.

Thies maners of princes (as I sayde) whiche be there¹ so euyll keepers of leagues cause the Vtopians, as I suppose, to make no leagues at all: whiche perchance woulde chaunge theire mynde if they lyued here. Howebeit they thynke that thoughe leagues be neuer so faythfully obserued and kept, yet the custome of makinge leagues was verye euel begonne. For this causeth men (as though nations which be separate a sondre by the space of a lytle hyl or a ryuer, were coupled together by no societe or bonde of nature), to thynke them selves borne aduersaryes and enemyes one to an other; and that it is^a lawfull for the one to seke the death and destruction of the other, if leagues were not; yea, and that, after the leagues be accorded, fryndeshyppe dothe not growe and encrease; but the lycence of robbynge and stealyng doth styll remayne, as farfurthe as, for lacke of foresight and aduisement in writinge the woordes of the league, anny sentence or clause to the contrary is not therin suffy-cyentlye comprehended. But they be of a contrary opinion: that is, that no man ought to be counted an

^a were.

Hos mores, ut dixi, principum illic foedera tam male seruantium puto in causa esse ne ulla feriant Vtopienses, mutaturi fortasse sententiam si hic uiuerent. Quanquam illis uidetur, ut optime seruentur, male tamen inoleuisse foederis omnino sancienti consuetudinem; qua fit ut (perinde ac si populum populo, quos exiguo spacio collis tantum
 129 aut riuus discriminat, nulla naturae societas copularet) | hostes atque inimicos inuicem sese natos putent, meritoque in mutuam grassari perniciem, nisi foedera prohibeant: quin his ipsis quoque initis non amicitiam coalescere sed manere praedandi licentiam, quatenus per imprudentiam dictandi foederis nihil quod prohibeat satis caute comprehensum in pactis est. At illi contra censent, neminem pro inimico habendum, a quo nihil iniuriae profectum est; naturae consortium enemy, whyche hath done no iniury; and that the felowshyppe of nature is a stronge league; and that men be better and more surely knitte together by loue and beneuolence, then by couenauntes of leagues; by hartie affection of minde, then by woordes.

¹ Namely, in the old world. The use of illic and hic in the same sentence of the Latin, both denoting Europe from different points of view, is a little confusing.

foederis uice esse; et satius ualentiusque homines inuicem beneuolentia quam pactis, animo quam uerbis, connecti.

Of warfare,

WARRE or battel as a thinge very beastely¹, and yet to no kynde of beastes in so muche vse as it is^a to man, they do detest and abhorre; and, contrarye to the custome almost of all other natyons, they cownte nothinge so much against glorie, as glory gotten in warre. And therefore, though they do daily practise and exercise themselves in the discipline of warre, and that^b not only the men, but also the women, vpon certeyne appoynted dayes, leste they shoulde be to seke in the feat of armes yf need should requyre; yet they neuer to^c goo to battayle, but other in the defence of their owne cowntreye, or to dryue owte of theyr frendes lande the enemyes that be comen in^d, or by their powre to deliuer from the

^a it is omitted.

^b that omitted.

^c to omitted.

^d that haue inuaded it.

DE RE MILITARI.

Bellum utpote rem plane beluinam—nec ulli tamen beluarum formae in tam assiduo, atque homini, est usu—summpere abominantur, contraque morem gentium ferme omnium nihil aequè ducunt inglorium atque petitam e bello gloriam. eoque, licet assidue militari sese disciplina exerceant, neque id uiri modo, sed foeminae quoque statis diebus, ne ad bellum sint, quum exigat usus, inhabiles, non temere capessunt tamen, nisi quo aut suos fines tueantur, aut amicorum terris infusos hostes propulsent, aut populum though not with the same etymology in view, on the word bellum: ‘Caeterum, ut verum dicam, bellis invita intersum, ideo quod minime bella sunt’ (Musica loq.).

¹ Lat. plane beluinam. This derivation is given in the Cornucopiae: ‘Bellua, immanis fera, quasi bellum gerens, a quo belluinus adiectivum,’ &c. Pace, in his De Fructu (p. 32), plays similarly,

yocke and bondage of tyrannye some people that be oppressed wyth tyranny^a. Whyche thyng they doo of meere pytye and compassion. Howebeit they sende healpe to theyre fryndes ; not euer¹ in their defence, but sumtimes also to requyte and reuenge iniuries before to them done. But thys they do not, onles their counsell and aduise in the matter be asked, whyles yt ys yet newe and freshe. For yf they fynde the cause probable, and yf the contrarye parte wyll not restore agayne suche thynges as be of them iustelye demaunded, then they be the chyeffe auctores and makers of the warre. Whyche they do not onlye as ofte as by inrodes and inuasions of soldiours prayes and booties be dreuen away, but then also much more mortally, when their frindes marchauntes in any land, other vnder the pretence of vniust lawes, or els by the wresting and wronge vnderstanding of good lawes, do sustaine an vniust accusation vnder the colour of iustice. Nother the battel which the vtopians fowghte for the Nephelogeates against the Alaopolitanes², a lytle before oure time, was made for annye other cause, but that the quempiam tyrannide pressum miserati (quod humanitatis gratia faciunt) suis uiribus Tyranni iugo et seruitute liberent. Quamquam auxilium gratificantur amicis, non semper quidem quo se defendant, sed interdum quoque illatas retallient, atque ulciscantur iniurias. 130 uerum id ita demum faciunt, si re adhuc integra consulantur ipsi, et probata causa, repetitis ac non redditis rebus, belli auctores inferendi sint ; quod non tunc solum decernunt, quoties hostili incurso abacta est praeda, uerum tum quoque multo infestius, quum eorum negotiatores usquam gentium, uel iniquarum praetextu legum, uel sinistra deriuatione bonarum, iniustam subeunt, iustitiae colore, calumniam. Nec alia fuit eius origo belli, quod pro Nephelogeatis aduersus Alaopolitas, paulo ante nostram memoriam, Vtopienses gessere, quam apud

^a [that be . . . tyrannye] that be therewith oppressed.

¹ That is, not always.

² The names here devised, Νεφελόγειται, 'Cloudlanders,' and Ἀλασπολίται,

'men of Blindville,' are suggestive of the Verax Historia of Lucian.

Nephelete marchaunte men, as the vtopians thought, suffred wrong of the Alaopolitanes, vnder the pretence of righte. But whether it were righte or wrong, it was with so cruell and mortal warre reuenged, the countreis round about ioyning their healpe and powre to the puisaunce and malice of bothe parties, that most flourishing and wealthie peoples beyng some of them shrewedly shaken, and some of them sharpely beaten, the mischeues were not finished nor ended, untill the Alaopolitanes at the last were yelded vp as bondmen into the iurisdiction of the Nepheletes. For the vtopians foughte not this warre for themselves. And yet the Nepheletes before the warre, when the Alaopolitanes flourished in wealth, were nothing to be compared with them.

So egerly the Vtopians prosequite the iniuries done to ther frindes, yea, in money matters; and not their owne likewise. For if they by coueyne or gyle be wiped beside their gooddes¹, so that no violence be done to their bodies, they wreake their anger by absteyning from occupieng with that nation, untill they haue made satisfaction. Not Alaopolitas Nepheletarum mercatoribus illata praetextu iuris (ut uisum est ipsis) iniuria. certe, siue illud ius, siue ea iniuria fuit, bello tam atroci est uindicata, quum ad proprias utriusque partis uires odiaque circumiectarum etiam gentium studia atque opes adiungerentur, ut florentissimis populorum aliis concussis, aliis uehementer afflictis, orientia ex malis mala Alaopolitarum seruitus demum ac deditio finierit, qua in Nepheletarum (neque enim sibi certabant Vtopienses) potestatem concessere; gentis, florentibus Alaopolitarum rebus, haud quaquam cum illis conferendae.

Tam acriter Vtopienses amicorum, etiam in pecuniis, iniuriam persequuntur, suas ipsorum non item; qui sicubi circumscripti bonis excidant, modo corporibus absit uis, hactenus irascuntur uti, quoad

¹ That is, cheated out of their goods. In Cooper's Thesaurus, ed. 1584, the sentence from Terence (Phorm. iv. 4. 1) 'emunxi argento senes' is rendered 'I have wipte the old fooles from al their money.' The use of

'beside' for 'out of' may be illustrated from a passage in Foxe: Acts and Mon. ii. 384 (quoted in the New English Dictionary)—'He put the new Pope Alexander beside the cushion, and was made pope himself.'

for bicause they set lesse stoore by their owne cytzeyns, then by their frindes; but that they take the losse of their fryndes money more heuely then the losse of their owne: bicause that their frindes marchaunte men, foras-muche as that they leise is their owne priuate gooddes, susteyne great damage by the losse; but their owne citizeyns leise nothing but of the commen gooddes, and of that which was at home plentifull and almost superfluous, elles hadde it not bene sent furth. Therefore no man feeleth the losse. And for this cause they thynke it to cruell an acte to reuenge that losse wyth the death of many; the incommoditie of the whiche losse no man feeleth nother in his liffe, nother^a in his liuinge. But if it chaunce that any of their men in any other countreye be maymed or kylled, whether it be done by a commen or a priuate councell; knowing and trying out the treuth of the matter by their ambassadours, onles the offenders be rendered vnto them in recompence of the iniury, they will not be appeased; but incontinent they proclayme warre against them. The offenders yelded they punnishe other with death or with bondage.

^a nor yet.

satisfactio fiat, eius commercio gentis abstineant. Non quod minoris sibi curae ciues quam socii sint, sed horum tamen pecuniam intercipi aegrius quam suam ferunt; propterea quod amicorum negotiatores, quoniam de suo perdunt priuato, graue uulnus ex iactura sentiunt; at ipsorum ciuibus nihil nisi de republica perit, propterea quod abundabat domi, ac ueluti supererat, alioqui non emittendum foras. Quo fit ut intertrimentum¹ citra cuiusquam sensum accidat. Quo circa nimis crudele censent id damnum multorum ulcisci mortibus, cuius damni incommodum nemo ipsorum aut uita aut uictu persentiscat. Caeterum si quis suorum usquam per iniuriam debilitetur, aut occidat^a, siue id publico factum consilio siue priuato sit, per legatos re comperta, nisi deditis noxiis placari non possunt quin ilico bellum denuncient. Noxae deditos aut morte aut seruitio puniunt.

^a Sic quoque A. Legend. occidatur.

¹ A rarer word than detrimentum, but used once by Cicero.

They be not only sorye, but also ashamed to atchieue the victory with much^a bloodshed¹; cowntinge it greate follye to bye pretyous wares to dere. They reioyse and auunte themselves, yf they vaynquyshe and oppresse theire enemyes by crafte and deceyt. And for that act they make a generall tryumphe; and as yf the matter were manfullye handeled, they sett vp a pyller of stone² in the place where they so vanquysshed theyre ennemyes, in token of the vycory. For then they glorye, then they booste and cracke that they haue plaied the men in dede, when they haue so ouercommen, as no other luyng creature but onely man coulede; that ys to saye, by the myghte and pusaunce^b of wytte. For wyth boddelye strengthe (saye they) beares, lyons, boores, wulffes, dogges, and other wylde beastes, doo fyghte³. And as the mooste

^a much omitted.^b puisance.

Cruentae uictoriae non piget modo eos, sed pudet quoque, reputantes inscitiam esse, quamlibet preciosas merces nimio emisse. arte doloque uictos, oppressos hostes impendio gloriantur, triumphumque ob eam rem pub-lice agunt, et uelut re strenue gesta tropheum erigunt. tunc enim demum uiriliter sese iactant et cum uirtute gessisse, quoties ita uicerint, quomodo nullum animal praeter hominem potuit, id est, ingenii uiribus. Nam corporis^a iniquunt, ursi, leones, apri, lupi,

Magno empta
uictoria.

^a Sic quoque A. Legend. corporibus.

¹ See the Introduction, p. xlvii; and compare the remarks of Erasmus on the proverb 'incruentum statuit trophaeum' (Adagia, ed. 1629, p. 481 b). A saying of Pittacus is quoted, 'oportere uictorias citra sanguinem fieri.'

² Lat. tropheum, a trophy.

³ With this compare what Erasmus wrote to the Abbot of St. Bertin, in a letter dated London, March 14, 1513-14: 'We are worse than the dumb animals, for among them it is only the wild beasts that wage war, and even they do not fight among themselves, but with beasts of a different species, and that with the weapons with which nature has furnished them.' Drummond's Life of Erasmus, i. p. 236. In a similar strain, but in language blending argument and satire together with a power seldom met with, the 'timid' Erasmus attacks the bellicose potentates of his day, in his Adagia. See the long disquisition headed Imperitia. (Adag. ed. 1629, pp. 295-298).

parte of them doo passe vs in strengthe and fyerce courage, so in wytte and reason wee be muche stronger than they all.

Theyre chyefe and princypall purpose in warre ys to obteyne that thynge, whyche yf they had before obteyned, they wolde not haue moued battayle. But if that be not possible, they take so cruell vengeaunce of them which be in the fault, that euer after they be aferde to doo the lyke. Thys ys theyre cheyffe and pryncypall intende, whyche they immedyatelye and fyrste of all prosecute and sette forewarde; but yet so, that they be more cyrcumspecte in auoydyng and eschewyng ieopardyes, then they be desyerous of prayse and renowne. Therefore immediatly after that warre is ones solemply denounced, they procure manye proclamations, signed with their owne commen seale, to be sett up preuilie at one time in their ennemyes lande, in places mooste frequented. In thyes proclamatyons they promysse greate rewardes to hym that will kyll their enemies prince; and sumwhat lesse gyftes, but them verye greate also, for euerye heade of them, whose names be in the sayde proclamacions conteined. They be those whome they count their chieffe aduersaries, next vnto the prince. What soeuer is pre-canes, caeteraque beluae dimicant; quarum ut pleraeque nos robore ac ferocia uincunt, ita cunctae ingenio et ratione superantur.

Hoc unum illi in bello spectant, uti id obtineant, quod si fuissent ante consecuti, bellum non fuerant illaturi; aut, si id res uetet, tam seueram ab his uindictam expetunt, ut idem ausuros in posterum terror absterreat. Hos propositi sui scopos destinant, quos mature petunt; at ita tamen uti prior uitandi pericula cura quam laudis aut famae consequendae sit. Itaque protinus indicto bello schedulas ipsorum publico signo roboratas locis maxime conspicuis hosticae terrae clam uno tempore multas appendi procurant, quibus ingentia pollicentur praemia, si quis principem aduersarium sustulerit; deinde minora, quanquam illa quoque egregia, decernunt, pro singulis eorum capitibus, quorum nomina in iisdem literis proscribunt. hii sunt quos secundum principem ipsum autores initi aduersus se consilii ducunt. 132

scribed vnto him that killeth any of the proclamed persons, that is dobled to him that bringeth any of the same to them aliue: yea, and to the proclamed persones them selves, if they wil chaunge their mindes and come into them, takinge their partes, they profer the same greate rewardes with pardon, and suerty of their liues.

Therefore it quickly cummeth to passe that they^a haue al other men in suspicion, and be vnfaithfull and mistrusting emong themselves one to another; liuing in great feare and in no lese ieopardye. For it is well knownen that dyuers times the most part of them, and specially the prince him selfe, hath bene betraied of them in whome they put their most hoope and trust. So that¹ there is no maner of acte nor dede, that giftes and rewardes do not enforce men vnto. And in rewardes they kepe no measure; but, remembring and considering into howe great hasard and ieopardie they call them, endeuoure themselves² to recompence the greatenes of the daunger

^a their enemies.

Quicquid percussori praeferunt, hoc geminant ei qui uiuum e proscriptis aliquem ad se perdiderint, quum ipsos quoque proscriptos praemiis iisdem, addita etiam impunitate, contra socios inuitant.

Itaque fit celeriter ut et caeteros mortales suspectos habeant, et sibi inuicem ipsi neque fidentes satis neque fidi sint, maximoque in metu et non minore periculo uersentur. Nam saepenumero constat euenisse uti bona pars eorum et princeps in primis ipse ab his proderentur, in quibus maximam spem reposuerunt. Tam facile quoduis in facinus impellunt munera. quibus illi nullum exhibent
133 modum: sed memores in quantum discrimen hortantur, operam dant uti periculi magnitudo beneficiorum mole compensetur; eoque

¹ This should not be so worded as to express a consequence. The Latin is Tam facile, &c., 'so easily are men incited by gifts to any deed whatever.' In the edition of 1624 'that' is omitted. Burnet connects the sentence with what follows: 'For the Rewards that the Utopians offer are so unmeasurably great, that there is no Sort of Crime to which Men cannot be drawn by them.'

² This is the reflexive use of the verb, as it occurs in the Collect for the Second Sunday after Easter. So in Twelfth Night, iv. 2, 'Malvolio . . . endeavour thyself to sleep.' A large with lyke great benefites. And therefore they promisse not only wonderfull greate abundaunce of golde, but also landes of greate reuenues, lyenge in moost sauiffe places emonge theire fryndes. And theyre promysse they perfourme faythfully, wythowte annye fraude or couyne.

Thys custome of byinge and sellynge aduersaryes amonge other people ys dysallowed, as a cruell acte of a basse and a cowardyshe mynde. But they in thys behalfe thynke themselves muche prayse woorthye, as who lyke wyse men by thys meanes dyspatche greate warres wyth owte annye battell or skyrnyshe. Yea, they cownte yt also a dede of pyty and mercye, bycause that by the deathe of a fewe offenders the lyues of a greate nombre of ynnocentes, as well of their own men as also of their enemies, be raunsomed and saued, which in fighting shoulde haue bene sleane. For they doo no lesse pytye the basse and commen sorte of their enemyes people, then they doo theyre owne; knowynge that they be dryuen to^a warre agaynste theyre wylles by the furyous madnes of theyre prynces and heades.

Yf by none of thies meanes the matter go forwarde as ^a and enforced to.

non immensam modo auri uim, sed praedia quoque magni reditus in locis apud amicos tutissimis propria ac perpetua pollicitantur, et summa cum fide praestant.

Hunc licitandi mercandique hostis morem, apud alios improbatum, uelut animi degeneris crudele facinus, illi magnae sibi laudi ducunt, tanquam prudentes, qui maximis hoc pacto bellis sine ullo prorsus praelio defungantur; humanique ac misericordes etiam, qui paucorum nece noxiorum numerosas innocentium uitas redimant, qui pugnando fuerint occubituri, partim e suis, partim ex hostibus; quorum turbam uulgusque non minus ferme quam suos miserantur, gnari non sua sponte eos bellum capessere, sed principum ad id furiis agi.

Si res hoc pacto non procedat, dissidiorum semina iaciunt aluntque;

they wolde haue yt, then they procure occasyons of debate and dyssentyon to be spredde emonge theyre enemyes ; as by bryngynge the prynces brother, or some of the noble men, in hoope to obtayne the kyngedome¹. Yf thys way preuayle not, then they reyse vp the people that be nexte neyghboures and borderers to theyr enemyes, and them they sette in theyre neckes² vnder the coloure of some olde tittle of ryghte, suche as kynges doo neuer lacke. To them they promysse theire helpe and ayde in theyre warre. And as for moneye they gyue them abundance ; but of theyre owne cytyzeyns they sende to them fewe or none. Whome they make so much of, and loue so intyerlye, that they wolde not be willing to chaung anye of them for their aduersaries prince. But their gold and siluer, bycause they kepe yt all for thys fratre principis aut aliquo e nobilibus in spem potiundi regni perducto. Si factiones internae languerint, finitimas hostibus gentes excitant committuntque, eruto uetusto quopiam titulo, quales nunquam regibus desunt. Suas ad bellum opes polliciti pecuniam affluenter suggerunt, ciues parcissime ; quos tam unice habent charos, tantique sese mutuo faciunt, ut neminem sint e suis cum aduerso principe libenter commutaturi. At aurum argentumque, quoniam unum hunc in usum by the prevalence of private war.'—Tytler, as before, ii. p. 305. 'He must be dull indeed,' writes Professor Brewer, 'who does not perceive that Utopia, when following out these principles, is removed but a few miles from the English Channel; and that a practice, which seems the more odious in these upright and wise Utopians, was tenfold more unjustifiable in those who, professing the doctrines of Christ, never scrupled to employ the same means against their own enemies.'—Reign of Henry VIII, i. p. 289. The wonder is that More, even under cover of a learned language, should have had the boldness to expose these proceedings so unmistakably.

¹ More may have been thinking of the intrigues carried on by his own sovereign in Scotland in the very year (1515) in which this was written. Since the battle of Flodden, in 1513, which left a mere child inheritor of the throne, Henry had been trying by every crooked means to get the boy and his mother (Henry's own sister, Margaret) into his power. The comments of the Scotch historian on his conduct will illustrate what is said in the text: 'By means of his indefatigable agent, Lord Dacre, he had not only corrupted some of its leading nobility, but so successfully fomented dissensions amongst them, that every effort of the regent to re-establish the control of the laws was rendered abortive

² See note above, p. 103.

only purpose, they laye it owte frankly and frely; as who shoulde lyue euen as wealthely, if they hadde bestowed it euerye penny. Yea, and besydes theyre ryches, whyche they kepe at home, they haue also an infynyte treasure abrode, by reason that (as I sayde before) manye natyons be in their debte. Therefore they hyere soldyours oute of all countreys, and sende them to battayle; but cheiflye of the Zapoletes¹. Thys people is .500. myles from Vtopia eastwarde. They be hydeous², sauage, and fyerce, dwellynge in wild woodes and high mountaines, where they were bredde and brought vp. They be of an harde nature, able to abide and susteine heate, cold, and labour; abhorrynge from all delycate deyntyces, occupyenge no husbandrye nor tyllage of the ground, homelye and rude both in the^a buildinge of their houses and in their apparrell; geuen vnto no goodnes, but onelye to the breede^b

^a the omitted.^b breedinge.

omne seruant, haud grauatim erogant, utpote non minus commode¹³⁴ uicturi, etiam si uniuersum impenderent. Quin praeter domesticas diuitias est illis foris quoque infinitus thesaurus, quo plurimae gentes, uti ante dixi, in ipsorum aere sunt. ita milites undique conductos ad bellum mittunt, praesertim ex Zapoletis. Hic populus quingentis passuum millibus ab Vtopia distat, orientem solem uersus, horridus, agrestis, ferox; syluas montesque asperos, quibus sunt innutriti, praeferrunt. Dura gens, aestus frigoris et laboris patiens, deliciarum expers omnium, neque agriculturae studens, et cum aedificiorum tum

¹ The edition of 1517 has a marginal note at this point: 'Gens haud ita dissimilis eluetiis.' But even without this the allusion to the Swiss would be obvious. They were the great mercenaries of the period.—See Oman's Art of War in the Middle Ages, 1885, pp. 62-95. Their tactics resembled those of the Macedonian phalanx.

It is strange that the derivation of 'Zapoletes' should have perplexed commentators. We cannot be sure whether More meant the nominative to represent Ζαπωλήται or Ζαπωλητοί; but in either case, whether as 'ready sellers' (of themselves), or 'readily sold,' the word would naturally express mercenaries.

² The Latin horridus was probably used by More to express only 'rough.' Robynson seems to have taken it in the sense (a legitimate one) of 'dreadful,' which 'hideous' in his time would still express. See the Glossary.

and bringynge vp of cattell. The mooste parte of their lyuynge is by huntynge and stealyng. They be borne onely to warre, whyche they dyligentlye and earnestlye seke for. And when they haue gotten yt, they be wonders gladd therof. They goo furthe of theyre countrey in greate companyes together. and who soeuer lacketh souldyours, there they proffer theyre seruyce for small wages. Thys ys onely the crafte that^a they haue to gette theyre lyuynge by. They maynteyne theyr lyfe by sekyng theyre deathe. For them, whomewyth they be in wayges, they fyghte hardelye, fyerslye, and faythfullye. But they bynde themselves for no certeyne tyme. But vpon thys condytion they entre into bondes, that the nexte daye they wyll take parte wyth the other syde for greater wayges; and the nexte daye after that they wyll be readye to come backe agayne for a lytle more moneye¹. There be fewe warres there awaye, wherin is not a greate

^a that omitted.

uestitus indiligens, pecorum duntaxat curam habent. Magna ex parte uenatu et raptu uiuunt, ad solum bellum nati, cuius gerendi facultatem studiose quaerunt, repertam cupide amplectuntur, et magno numero egressi cuius requirenti milites uili semet offerunt. Hanc unam uitae artem nouerunt, qua mors quaeritur. Sub quibus merent, acriter pro iis et incorrupta fide dimicant. Verum in nullum certum diem sese obstringunt, sed ea lege in partes ueniunt, ut posteriore die uel ab hostibus oblato maiore stipendio sint staturi; iidem perendie rursus inuitati plusculo remigrant. Rarum oritur bellum, in quo non bona help. His letter to Wolsey is dated at the end of November, 1515, and gives a striking picture of the state of the country, and the exorbitant demands of the Swiss mercenaries. The letter is preserved in Cotton MSS. Vitell. B. xviii, p. 222, from which it was printed in Planta's History of the Helvetic Confederacy, 1807, ii. pp. 424-434. See also Brewer: Letters and Papers, vol. ii. pt. i., p. liii, and no. 553.

¹ It will be noticed how much space More devotes to the ways and doings of this people. This may have been due to the prominent part played by the Swiss in European affairs about the time he wrote. At the great battle of Marignano, in October, 1515, they fought on the side of Ferdinand and the Pope against the King of France, and were defeated. In that same year More's friend Richard Pace, was sent to Zürich, to negotiate for their

nombre of them in bothe partyes. Therefore yt daylye chauncethe that nye kynsefolke, whyche were hiered together on one parte, and there verye fryndelye and famylyerly vsed themselves one wyth an other, shortely after, beyng separate into^a contrarye partes, runne one agaynste an other enuyouslye and fycercelye; and forgettyng bothe kyndred and frendeshyp, thruste theyre swordes one in another: and that for none other cause, but that they be hyered of contrarye prynces for a lytle moneye. Whyche they doo so hyghelye regarde and esteame, that they will easelye be prouoked to change partes for a halfpenny more wayges by the daye. So quykelye they haue taken a smacke in couetesenes; whyche for all that ys to them no proffyte. For, that they gette by fyghtyng, ymmedyatelye they spende vnthryftelye and wretchedlye in ryott.

Thys people fyghte for the Vtopians agaynste all natyons, bycause they giue them greater wayges, then anye other natyon wyll. For the Vtopians, lyke as they seke good men to vse wel, so they seke thyes euell and vycyous men to abuse. Whome, when neade requyreth, pars illorum in utroque sint exercitu. itaque accidit quotidie ut sanguinis necessitudine coniuncti, qui et iisdem in partibus conducti familiarissime semet inuicem utebantur, paulo post in contrariis^a distracti copias, hostiliter concurrant, et infestis animis, obliui generis, 135 immemores amicitiae, mutuo sese confodiant, nulla alia causa in mutuum incitati perniciem, quam quod a diuersis principibus exigua pecuniola conducti; cuius tam exactam habent rationem, ut ad diurnum stipendium unius accessione assis facile ad commutandas partes impellantur. Ita celeriter imbiberunt auaritiam, quae tamen nulli est eis usui. Nam quae sanguine quaerunt, protinus per luxum, et eum tamen miserum, consumunt.

^a in.

Hic populus Vtopiensibus aduersus quosuis mortales militat, quod tanti ab hiis eorum conducatur opera quanti nusquam alibi. Vtopiensis si quidem ut bonos quaerunt quibus utantur, ita hos quoque homines pessimos quibus abutantur. quos quum usus postulat, magnis im-

^a contrarias, A. recte.

wyth promisses of greate rewardes they putt furthe into greate ieopardyes ; from whens the mooste part of them neuer cummeth againe to aske their rewardes. But to them that remain on liue^a they paye that which they promised faithfully, that they may be the more willinge to put themselves in like daungers another time. Nor the Vtopians passe not how many of them they bring to distruction. For they beleue that they should doo a very good deade for all mankind, if they could ridde out of the wordle all that fowle, stinkinge denne of that most wicked and cursed people¹.

Next vnto thies they vse the soldiours of them whom they fight for^b. And then the help of their other frindes. And last of al they ioyne to² their owne citizeins. Emong whome they gyue to one of tried vertue and prowes the rewle, gouernance, and conductyon of the hole armye. Vnder hym they appoynte ii. other, whyche whyles he ys sauffe be bothe pryuate and owte of offyce ; but yf he be pulsos pollicitationibus maximis obiiciunt periculis, unde plerunque magna pars nunquam ad exigenda promissa reuertitur. superstitibus, quae sunt polliciti, bona fide persoluunt, quo ad similes ausus incendunt. Neque enim pensi quicquam habent quam multos ex eis perdant, rati de genere humano maximam merituos gratiam se, si tota illa colluue populi tam tetri ac nepharii orbem terrarum purgare possent.

^a aliue.^b for whom they-fight.

Secundum hos eorum copiis utuntur, pro quibus arma capiunt ; deinde auxiliariis caeterorum amicorum turmis. Postremo suos ciues adiungunt, e quibus aliquem uirtutis probatae uirum totius exercitus summae praeficiunt. Huic duos ita substituunt, uti eo
136 incolumi | ambo priuati sint ; capto aut interempto, alter e duobus

¹ Robynson's epithets are vigorous, but in this case hardly surpass More's own. I do not know whether Erasmus is referring to the same people, when he writes : ' Quin est apud Germanos populus, cuius haec praecipua gloria, quam plurimos mortales ferro trucidasse : quod cum per se immane est, tum hoc etiam foedius, quod hoc faciunt mercede conducti ; veluti carnifex quispiam ad lanienam precio emptus.' Adagia, as before p. 482 a.

² 'Join to ;' that is, add or associate.

taken or slayne, the one of the other .ii. succedeth hym, as yt were by inherytaunce¹. And if the second miscarry, then the third taketh hys rowme; leaste that (as the chaunce of battell ys vncerteyne and dowtefull), the yeopardye or deathe of the capytayne shoulde brynge the hole armye in hasarde. They chuse soldyers owte of euerye cytye those whyche putt furthe themselves wyllynglye. For they thruste no man furthe into warre agaynste hys wyll; bycause they beleue, yf annye man be fearefull and faynte harted of nature, he wyll not onelye doo no manfull and hardye act hym selfe, but also by^a occasyon of cowardenes to hys fellowes. But yf annye battell be made agaynste theyre owne countreye, then they putt thyes cowardes, so that they be stronge bodyed, in shyppes emonge other bolde harted men. Or elles they dyspose them vpon the walles, from whens they maye not flye. Thus, what for shame that theyre ennyes be at hande, and what for bycause they be without hope of runnyng awaye, they forgette all feere. And manye tymes extreame necessytye turneth cowardnes into prowes and manlynes.

But as none of them ys thrust forthe of his countrey

^a be.

uelut haereditate succedat; eique ex euentu tertius, ne (ut sunt bellorum sortes uariae) periclitante duce totus perturbetur exercitus. E quaque ciuitate delectus exercetur ex his qui sponte nomen profitentur. neque enim inuitus quisquam foras in militiam truditur; quod persuasum habeant, si quis sit natura timidior, non ipsum modo nihil facturum strennue, sed metum etiam comitibus incussurum. Caeterum si quod bellum ingruat in patriam, ignauos huiusmodi, modo ualeant corpore, in naues mixtos melioribus collocant, aut in moenibus sparsim disponunt, unde non sit refugiendi locus. ita suorum pudor, hostis in manibus, atque adempta fugae spes, timorem obruunt, et saepe extrema necessitas in uirtutem uertitur.

At sicuti ad externum bellum ex ipsis protrahitur nolens, ita

¹ This was the Lacedaemonian custom. Thucyd. iv. 38.

into warre agaynste hys wyll, so women that be wyllynge to accompanye their husbandes in times of warre be not prohybyted or stopped^a. Yea, they prouoke and exhorte them to yt wyth prayses. And in sett fylde the wyues doo stande euerye one by here owne husbandes syde. Also euery man is compassed nexte abowte wyth hys owne chyl dren, kins folkes, and alliaunce; that they, whom nature chiefelye moueth to mutuall succoure, thus stondynge together, maye helpe one an other¹. It is a great reproche and dishonestie for the husbände to come home wythowte hys wiffe, or the wiffe withoute her husband, or the sonne without his father. And therefore, if the other part sticke so harde by it, that the battell come to their handes, it is fought with great slaughter and bloodshed, euen to the vtter destruction of both partes. For as they make all the meanes and shyftes that maye be, to kepe themselves from the necessitye of fyghtynge, so that they may dispatche the battell by their hiered soldyours, so, when there is no remedy but that they muste neades fyghte themselves, then they do as corragiouslye fall to foeminas uolentes in militiam comitari maritos adeo non prohibent, ut exhortentur etiam et laudibus incitent. profectas cum suo quamque uiro pariter in acie constituunt. tam sui quemque liberi, affines, cognati circumstant, ut hi de proximo sint mutuo sibi subsidio, quos maxime ad ferendas inuicem suppetias natura stimulat. In maximo probro est coniux absque coniuge redux, aut amisso parente reuersus filius. quo fit uti si ad ipsorum manus uentum sit, modo perstent hostes, longo et lugubri praelio ad internitionem usque decernatur.

^a letted.

137 Nempe, ut omnibus cu[r]rant modis ne ipsis dimicare necesse sit, modo bello possint uicaria conductitorum manu defungi; ita, quum uitari non potest quin ipsi ineant pugnam, tam intrepide capessunt quam monstrata cominus captiuitate,' &c. Tac., Germ. c. viii. Compare also Caesar, Bell. Gall. vii. 51. It was the same, to a great degree, with the ancient Gauls and Britons.

¹ Such was the custom of the Germans in ancient times: 'Memoriae proditur quasdam acies inclinatas iam et labantes a feminis restitutas constantia precum et obiectu pectorum et

it, as before, whyles they myght, they dyd wyselye auoyde it^a. Nor they be not moste fierce at the fyrst bronte. But in continuaunce by litle and lytle their fierce corrage increaseth, with so stubborne and obstynate myndes, that they wyll rather die then gyue backe an ynche. For that suertye of lyuynge, whiche euery man hath at home, beyng ioyned with noo carefull anxietye or remembrance how their posteritie shall lyue after them (for this^b pensifenes oftentimes breaketh and abateth courageous stomakes) maketh them stowte and hardy, and dysdaynful to be conquered. Moreouer, their knowledge in cheualrye and feates of armes putteth them in a good hope. Finally, the holsome and vertuous opinions, wherin they were brought vp euen from their childehode, partely through learnyng, and partelye throughe the good ordenaunces and lawes of their weale publike, augmente and encrease their manfull currage. By reason whereof they nother set so litle store by their liues, that they will rasshely and vnaduisedlye cast them away; nor they be not so farre in lewde and fond loue therewith, that they will shamefully couete to kepe them, when honestie biddeth leaue them.

When the battel is hottest and in al places most fierce

^a and refuse it.

^b his.

quoad licuit prudenter detrectabant : nec tam primo ferociunt impetu, quam mora sensim et duratione inualescunt, tam affirmatis animis ut interimi citius quam auerti queant. Quippe uictus illa securitas, quae cuique domi est, ademptaque de posteris anxia cogitandi cura (nam haec solitudo^a generosos ubique spiritus frangit) sublimem et uinci dedignantem facit. Ad haec militaris disciplinae peritia fiduciam praebet. postremo rectae opiniones (quibus et doctrina et bonis reipublicae institutis imbuti a pueris sunt) uirtutem addunt; quae neque tam uilem habent uitam ut temere prodigant, neque tam improbe charam ut, quum honestas ponendam suadeat, auare turpiterque retineant.

Dum ubique pugna maxima feruet, lectissimi iuuenes coniurati

^a Sic et B. Sollicitudo, recte, ed. 1563.

and feruent, a bende of chosen and picked yong men, whiche be sworne to liue and dye together, take vpon them to destroye their aduersaries capitaine¹. Hym^a they inuade, now with preuy wyeles, now by open strength. At hym they strike both nere and farre of. He is assayled with a long and a continewal assault²; freshe men styll commyng in the weried mens places. And seldome it chaunceth (onles he saue hymselfe by flying) that he is not other slayne, or els taken prysoner, and yelded to his enemies alyue. If they wynne the fylde, they persecute not their enēmies with the violent rage of slaughter. For they had rather take them aliue then kyll them. Nother they do so followe the chase and pursute of their enemies, but they leaue behynde them one parte of their hoste in battayl arraye vnder their standardys. In so muche that, if all their hole armie be discumfetyd and ouercum, sauing the rereuarde, and that they therewith achieue the victory, then they had rather lette all their enemies scape, then to followe them owt of array. For they remembre it hath chaunced vnto them-

^a whome.

deutique ducem sibi deposcunt aduersum. hunc aperte inuadunt, hunc ex insidiis adoriuntur. idem eminus idem minus petitur, longoque ac perpetuo cuneo, summissis assidue in fatigatorum locum recentibus, oppugnatur; raroque accidit (ni sibi fuga prospiciat) ut non intereat, aut uiuus in hostium potestatem ueniat. Si ab ipsis uictoria sit, haud quaquam caede grassantur; fugatos enim comprehendunt quam occidunt libentius; neque unquam ita persequuntur fugientes, ut non unam | interim sub signis instructam aciem retineant: adeo uisi^a caeteris superati partibus, postrema acie sua uictoriam adepti sint, elabi potius hostes uniuersos sinant quam insequi fugientes perturbatis suorum ordinibus insuecant; memores sibimet haud semel usu uenisse ut, mole totius

Dux potissimum impetendus, quo citius finiatur bellum.

^a nisi, A. vt si recte B.

¹ Tactics not unheard of in modern football matches.

² In the Latin, cuneo; a wedge-shaped, or compact, body of assailants.

selfes more then ones : the hole powre and strength of theyre hoste being vanquished and put to flight, whiles their enemies, reioysing in the victory, haue persecuted them flying, some one way and some an other ; fewe^a of their men lying in an ambusshe, there redde at all occasions¹, haue sodaynly rysen vpon them thus dispersed and scattered owt of array, and through presumption of safetie vnaduisedly pursuyng the chase, and haue incontinent changed the fortune of the hole battayll ; and spyte of there tethes wrestyng owt of their handes the sure and vndowted victory, being a litle before conquered, haue for their parte conquered the conquerers.

It is hard to say whether they be craftier in layng an ambusshe, or wittier in auoydyng the same. Yowe woulde thynke they intende to flye, when they meane nothing lesse. And contrary wise, when they go about that purpose, yow wold beleue it were the least part of their thoughte. For if they perceau themselves other ouermatched in nombre, or closed in to narrowe a place,

^a a small companye.

exercitus uicta profligataque, quum hostes uictoria gestientes hac atque illac abeuntes persequerentur, pauci ipsorum in subsidiis collocati, ad occasiones intenti, dispersos ac palantes illos et praesumpta securitate negligentes derepente adorti totius euentum praelii mutauerunt², extortaque e manibus tam certa et indubitata uictoria uicti uictores inuicem uicerunt.

Haud facile dictu est, astutiores instruendis³ insidiis an cautiores ad uitandas sient⁴. fugam parare credas, quum nihil minus in animo habent : contra, quum id consilii capiunt, nihil minus cogitare putes. Nam si nimium sese sentiunt aut numero aut loco premi, tunc aut

¹ That is, watching their opportunity. For the subject of laying ambuscades, see Polyænus, Stratag. I. xi. 2 ; II. xii.

² As usu uenisse ut precedes, this should have been mutauerunt, and uicerint just after. The error, due to the length of the sentence, is left uncorrected in later editions.

³ This should probably be two words, in struendis.

⁴ A form common in Plautus and Terence, whence probably More took it.

then they remoue their campe other in the nyght season with silence, or by some pollicie they deceaue their enemies; or in the daye time they retiere backe so softly¹, that it is no lesse ieoperdie to medle with them when they gyue backe then when they preese on. They fence and fortifie their campe sewerlye with a deape and a brode trenche. The earth therof is cast inward². Nor they do not set drudgeis and slaues a worke about it. It is doone by the handes of the souldiours them selves. All the hole armye worketh vpon it, except them that watche^a in harneis before the trenche for sodeyne auentures. Therefore, by the labour of so manye, a large trenche closinge in a great compasse of grounde is made in lesse tyme then any man wold beleue.

Theire armour or harneis whiche they weare is sure and stronge to receaue strokes, and handsome for all mouinges and gestures of the bodye; in so muche that it is not vnweldy to swymme in. For in the discipline

^a kepe watche and warde.

noctu agmine silente castra mouent, aut aliquo stratagemate eludunt, aut interdiu ita sensim sese referunt, tali seruato ordine, ut non minus periculi sit cedentes quam instantes adoriri. Castra diligentissime communiunt fossa prealta lataque, terra quae egeritur introrsum reiecta; nec in eam rem opera mediastinorum utuntur. ipsorum manibus militum res agitur, totusque exercitus in opere est, exceptis qui pro uallo in armis ad subitos casus excubant. Itaque tam multis 139 adnitentibus, magna | multumque amplexa loci munimenta omni fide citius perficiunt.

Armis utuntur ad excipiendos ictus firmis, nec ad motum gestumue quemlibet ineptis, adeo ut ne natando quidem molesta sentiant. Nam armati natate inter militaris disciplinae

Formae
armorum.

¹ For this use of the word 'softly,' Lat. sensim, see the Glossary. Robynson leaves out the clause, tali seruato ordine, 'keeping such good order,' and so makes it difficult to see the reason for what is stated.

² This was the regular custom. See the article Castra in Smith's Dict. of Antiquities. It was a necessary proceeding, in order that the agger, formed by the earth thrown out, might be itself protected by the trench, and more completely under the control of the defenders.

of their warefare, amonge other feates they lerne to swimme in harneis¹. Their weapons be arrowes afarre of^a, which they shote both strongely and suerly²; not onely fotemen but also horsemen. At hande strokes they vse not swordes but pollaxes, whiche be mortall, aswel in sharpenes as in weyghte, bothe for foynes and downe strokes. Engines for warre they deuise and inuente wonders wittely. Whiche, when they be made, they kepe very secret; leaste if they should be knowen before neade requyre, they should be but laughed at, and serue to no purpose. But in makynge them, hereunto they haue chiefe respecte; that they be both easy to be caried, and handsome to be moued and turned about.

^a aloude.

rudimenta consuescunt. tela sunt eminus sagittae, quas acerrime simul et certissime iaculantur, non pedites modo sed ex equis etiam; cominus uero non gladii, sed secures uel acie letales uel pondere, seu caesim seu punctim feriant. Machinas excogitant solertissime, factas accuratissime caelant, ne ante proditae quam res postulet ludibrio magis quam usui sint. in quibus fabricandis hoc in primis respiciunt, uti uectu faciles et habiles circumactu sint.

¹ In this suggestion, as in many others, More was in advance of his own age, or even of ours. The soldiers of Charles XII of Sweden were trained to cross rivers by swimming. The subject may have been freshly brought to the minds of English people, a short time before More wrote, by the conflict between the English and French fleets off Brest, Aug. 10, 1512, in which the two flagships grappled together and both took fire, when 'the captain of the English ship (being the Regent), and of the French (call'd the Cordeliere), together with the soldiers in them, perished all, save only a few French, who saved themselves with swimming.' See Lord Herbert of Cherbury's Hist. of England under Henry VIII., ed. 1683, p. 25.

² In this description, and in that of the bills or poleaxes just after, we easily see a reminiscence of the English archers and infantry. 'In times past,' writes Harrison, in a well-known passage, 'the cheefe force of England consisted in their long bowes. But now we haue in maner generallie giuen ouer that kind of artillerie, and for long bowes in deed doo practise to shoot compasse for our pastime.'—Description of England, ed. 1877, p. 279. (For shooting 'compasse,' that is, at an angle or elevation, see the examples given in the New English Dict.) Compare also the extracts from Sir John Smythe's Discourses on the forms and effects of diuers sorts of Weapons, quoted in Letters of eminent Literary Men (Camden Society), 1843, pp. 54, 55.

Truce taken with their enemies for a short time they do so firmly and faithfully keep, that they will not break it; no not though they be their unto provoked¹. They do not waste nor destroy their enemies land with forragings, nor they burne not up their corn. Yea, they save it as much as may be from being overrun and trodden downe, other with men or horses; thynkyng that it groweth for their owne use and proffyt. They hurt no man that is unarmed, onles he be an espiall. All cities that be yielded unto them, they defende. And suche as they wyne by force of assaulte they nother spoyle nor sacke; but them that withstode and dyswaded the yielding up of the same they put to death; the other soldiers they punnyshe with bondage. All the weake multitude they leave untouched. If they knowe that anye citizens counselled to yelde and rendre up the citie, to them they gyve parte of the condemned mens goodes. The resydewe they distribute and gyve freely amonge them, whose helpe they had in the same warre. For none of them selves taketh anye portion of the praye.

But when the battayll is fynished and ended, they put Initas cum hostibus inducias tam sancte observant, ut ne lacessiti quidem uiolent. Hostilem terram non depopulantur, neque segetes exurunt; imo ne hominum equorumue pedibus conterantur, quantum fieri potest, prouident, rati in ipsorum usus crescere. Inermem neminem laedunt, nisi idem speculator sit. Deditas urbes tuentur, at nec expugnatas diripiunt, sed per quos deditio est impedita eos enecant, caeteris defensoribus in seruitutem addictis. Imbellem turbam omnem relinquunt intactam. Si quos deditionem suasisse compererint, his e damnatorum bonis aliquam partem impartiuunt; reliqua sectione³ auxiliares donant. Nam ipsorum nemo quicquam de praeda capit.

De induciis.

140 Caeterum confecto | bello non amicis impensas in quos insumpsere,

¹ Compare the Introduction, p. xxxii.

² Burnet, more correctly, 'When a War is ended.'

³ Sectionis is the regular term for distribution of booty by auction, and the like. See Cic. De Invent. i. 45.

theire frendes to neuer a penny coste of al the chardges that they were at, but laye it vpon theire neckes that be conquered. Them they burdeyne with the hole chardge of theire expenceis; which they demaunde of them partelye in money, to be kept for lyke vse of battayll, and partelye in landes of greate reuenues, to be payde vnto them yearlye for euer. Suche reuenues they haue nowe in manye countreis; whiche by litle and lytle rysyng, of dyuers and sondry causes, be encreased aboue vii. hundredreth thousand ducates¹ by the yere. Thither they sende furth some of their citezeins as Lieuetenauntes², to lyue theire sumptuously lyke men of honoure and renowne. And yet, this notwithstanding, mucche money is saued, which commeth to the commen treasury; onles it so chaunce, that thei had rather truste the cuntry with the money. Which many times thei do so long vntil they haue neade to occupie it. And it seldome happeneth, that thei demaund al. Of thies landes thei assigne part vnto them, which at their request and exhortacion put sed uictis imputant, exiguntque eo nomine partim pecuniam, quam in similes bellorum usus reseruant, partim praedia, quae sint ipsis apud eos perpetua non exigui census. Huiusmodi reditus nunc apud multas gentes habent, qui uariis ex causis paulatim nati supra septingenta ducatorum millia in singulos annos excreuere; in quos e suis ciuibus aliquos emittunt quaestorum nomine, qui magnifice uiuant, personamque magnatum illic prae se ferant. at multum tamen superest quod inferatur aerario, nisi malint eidem genti credere, quod saepe tantisper faciunt, quoad³ uti necesse sit: uixque accidit unquam ut totam reposcant. Ex his praediis partem assignant illis qui ipsorum

At hodie
uictores maximam partem dependant.

¹ Taking the gold ducat, which is the one usually meant, at 9s. 4d., this would be about £327,000.

² The English by itself might seem to suggest such an instance as that of William, Lord Mountjoy, Erasmus's friend and pupil, who was appointed governor of Hammes Castle in Picardy, near the frontiers of Calais. But the Latin, quaestorum nomine, points rather to officials sent out, as Burnet words it, 'to receive these Revenues.'

³ Tantisper followed by quoad is a post-classical construction.

themselves in such ieoperdies as I spake of before. If anye prynce stirre vp warre agaynst them, intending to inuade their lande, they mete hym incontinent owt of their owne borders with great powre and strengthe. For they neuer lyghtly make warre in their owne countrei. Nor they be neuer brought into so extreme necessitie, as to take helpe out of forreyne landes into thire owne Ilande.

hortatu tale discrimen adeunt, quale ante monstrauit. Si quis princeps, armis aduersus eos sumptis, eorum ditionem paret inuadere, magnis illico uiribus extra suos fines occurrunt. nam neque temere in suis terris bellum gerunt, neque ulla necessitas tanta est, ut eos cogat aliena auxilia in insulam suam admittere.

Of the religi= gyons in Vtopia.

There be dyuers kyndes of religion, not only in sondry partes of the Ilande, but also in dyuers places of euerye citie. Some worshyp for God the sunne; some the mone; some some other of the planetes¹. There be that gyue worshyp to a man that was ones of excellent vertue or of famous glory², not only as God, but also as the chiefest and hyghest God. But the moste and the wysest parte (reiectyng all thies) beleue that there is a certayne Godlie powre unknowen, euerlastyng,

DE RELIGIONIBVS VTOPIENSIVM.

RELIGIONES sunt non per insulam modo uerum singulas etiam urbes uariae, aliis Solem, Lunam aliis, aliis aliud errantium syderum dei uice | uenerantibus. sunt quibus homo quispiam, cuius olim aut uirtus aut gloria enituit, non pro deo tantum, sed pro summo etiam deo suspicatur. At multo maxima pars, eademque longe prudentior, nihil horum, sed unum quoddam numen putant, 141

¹ These various opinions are discussed by Lactantius, Op. ed. 1660, pp. 162 sqq. 'Non est astrorum motus voluntarius, sed necessarius; quia praestitutis legibus officiisque deseruiunt.' They therefore cannot be gods. The opinion that the Deity was 'numen quoddam, per mundum diffusum' (referred to just afterwards) was akin to that of Pythagoras: 'Pythagoras ita

definiuit quid esset Deus: Animus, qui per universas mundi partes omnemque naturam commeans atque diffusus' (Ib. p. 24). Comp. also Cicero, De Nat. Deor. i. § 11.

² As Gaudama the Buddha, Confucius, or Zoroaster. But the expressions which follow would be too strong to apply to these.

incomprehensible, inexplicable, farre aboute the capacitie and retche of mans witte, dispersed through out all the worlde, not in bygnes, but in vertue and powre¹. Hym they call the father of all. To hym allone they attrIBUTE the begynnynge, the encreasynge, the procedynge, the chaunge, and the endes of all thynges. Nother they gyue deuine^a honours to any other then to him.

Yea, all the other also, though they be in diuers opinions, yet in this pointe they agree all together with the wisest sort, in beleuyng that there is one chiefe and pryncipall God, the maker and ruler of the hole worlde; whome they all commonly in their cuntry language call Mythra². But in this they disagree, that amonge some he is counted one, and amonge some an other. For euery one of them, whatsoeuer that is whiche he taketh for the chiefe God, thynketh it to be the very same nature, to whose onely deuyne myght and maiestie the som and soueraintie of al thynges, by the consent of all people, is incognitum, aeternum, immensum, inexplicabile, quod supra mentis humanae captum sit, per mundum hunc uniuersum uirtute non mole diffusum: hunc parentem uocant. Origines, auctus, progressus, uices, finesque rerum omnium, huic acceptos uni referunt; nec diuinos honores alii praeterea ulli applicant.

^a any deuine.

Quin caeteris quoque omnibus, quanquam diuersa credentibus, hoc tamen cum istis conuenit, quod esse quidem unum censent summum, cui et uniuersitatis opificium et prouidentia debeatur; eumque communiter omnes patria lingua Mythram appellant, sed eo dissentiunt, quod idem alius apud alios habetur; autumante quoque, quicquid id sit quod ipse summum ducit, eandem illam prorsus esse naturam, cuius unius numini ac maiestati rerum omnium summa omnium attributed and geuen. Howe be it, they al begynne by litle and litle to forsake and fall from thys varietie of superstitions, and to agree togethers in that religion whiche semethe by reason to passe and excell the resy-dewe. And it is not to be dowted but all the other would longe agoo haue bene abolyshed; but that, whatsoeuer vnprosperous thyng happened to any of them as he was mynded to chaunge his religion, the fearefulnes of people dyd take it not as a thyng cummyng by chaunce, but as sente frome God owt of heauen¹; as thoughe the God, whose honoure he was forsakyng, woulde reuenge that wicked purpose against him.

¹ This seems a reminiscence of Virgil's 'totamque infusa per artus | mens agitat molem;' though the use of the word uirtute, in the Latin, may rather point to the imitation of that passage by Statius, Theb. i. 416.

² More had before remarked, that the old language of the Utopians was 'not unlike the Persian tongue.' Hence the name of the Persian Sun-god is appropriately used here. See the note above, p. 148.

But after they harde vs speake of the name of Christe, of his doctryne, lawes, myracles, and of the no lesse wonderful constancie of so manye martyrs, whose bloude wyllnglye shedde brought a great nombre of nations throughe out all partes of the worlde into their secte; yowe wyll not beleue with howe gladdes they agreed vnto the same; whether it were by the secrete consensu gentium tribuitur. Caeterum paulatim omnes ab ea superstitionum uarietate desciscunt, atque in unam illam coalescunt religionem, quae reliquas ratione uidetur antecellere. Neque dubium est quin caeterae iam pridem euanuissent, nisi quicquid improperum^a cuiquam inter mutandae religionis consilia fors obiecisset, non id accidisse casu, sed caelitus immissum interpretaretur timor; tanquam numine, cuius relinquebatur cultus, impium contra se propositum uindicante. 142

At posteaquam acceperunt a nobis CHRISTI nomen, doctrinam, mores, miracula, nec minus mirandam tot martyrum constantiam, quorum sponte fusus sanguis tam numerosas gentes in suam sectam longe lateque traduxit, non credas quam pronis in eam affectibus

^a in posterum, A.

¹ Compare what was said in the Introduction, p. xlix, about the origin of the De Civitate Dei, and St. Augustine's own statement in the first chapter of his great work: 'Sic evaserunt multi, qui nunc Christianis temporibus detrahunt, et mala quae illa civitas pertulit Christo imputant.'

inspiration of God, or els for that they thought it next^a vnto that opinion which amonge them is counted the chiefest. Howe be it, I thynke this was no smal healpe and furtheraunce in the matter, that they harde vs saye that Christ instytuted¹ amonge hys all thynges commen; and that the same communitie dothe yet remayne amongst the rightest Christian companies². Verely, howe soeuer it came to passe, manye of them consented togethers in oure religion, and were washed in the hollye water of baptisme³.

But because amonge vs foure (for no moo of vs was left alyue; two of oure companye beyng deade⁴) there was no prieste, whiche I am ryghte sorye for, they, beinge entered and instructed in all other poyntes of oure religion, lacke onelye those sacramentes, whyche here none but priestes do minister. Howe be it, they vnderstande and perceyue them, and be verye desierous of the same. Yea, they reason and dispute the matter earnestly amonge

^a nieghest.

etiam ipsi concesserint, siue hoc secretius inspirante deo, siue quod eadem ei uisa est haeresi proxima, quae est apud ipsos potissima: quanquam hoc quoque fuisse non paulum momenti crediderim, quod CHRISTO communem suorum uictum audierant placuisse, et apud germanissimos Christianorum conuentus adhuc in usu esse. Certe, quoquo id momento accidit, haud pauci Coenobia.
nostram in religionem coierunt, Lymphaque sacra sunt abluti.

Verum quoniam in nobis quatuor (totidem enim duntaxat supereramus, nam duo fati concesserant) nemo, id quod doleo, sacerdos erat, caeteris initiati, ea tamen adhuc sacramenta desyderant, quae apud nos non nisi sacerdotes conferunt. intelligunt tamen, optantque ita ut nihil uehementius. quin hoc quoque sedulo iam inter se disputant, an

¹ This is too strong a rendering of Christo placuisse: 'that Christ approved of a community of living among his followers.'

² The marginal note in the Latin points the allusion to monasteries.

³ As to the lawfulness of lay baptism in exceptional cases, which must be understood here, see Bingham, Antiquities, Bk. II. ch. xx. § 9.

⁴ The party had originally consisted of Hythloday and five companions. See above, p. 29.

themselves, whether, without the sendyng of a christian bysshoppe, one chosen out of theire owne people may receaue the ordre of priesthode. And truly they were mynded to chuse one: but at my departure from them they hadde chosen none. They also, whiche do not agree to Christes religion, feare¹ no man frome it, nor speake agaynste anye man that hath receyued it. Sauing that one of oure companye in my presence was sharply punyshed. He, as sone as he was baptised, began against our willes, with more earnest affection then wisdome, to reason of Christes religion; and began to waxe so hotte in his matter, that he dyd not only preferre oure relygion before all other, but also dyd vtterlye despise an condempne al other, callynge them prophane, and the followers of them wicked and deuclishe², and the chyldren of euerlasting dampnation. When he had thus longe reasoned the matter, they layde holde on hym, accused hym, and condempned hym into exyle; not as a despyser of religion, but as a sedicious persone, and a rayser vp of dissention amonge the people. For this is one of the sine Christiani pontificis missu quisquam e suo numero delectus sacerdotii consequatur characterem. Et electuri sane uidebantur; uerum quum ego discederem nondum elegerant. Quin hi quoque, religio[ni] 143 Christianae qui non assentiunt, neminem tamen absterrent, nullum oppugnant imbutum; nisi quod unus e nostro coetu me praesente cohercitus est. Is quum recens ablutus, nobis contra suadentibus, de CHRISTI cultu publice maiore studio quam prudentia dissereret, usque adeo coepit incallescere, ut iam nostra^a modo caeteris anteferet, sed reliqua protenus uniuersa damnaret; prophana ipsa, cultores impios Laude trahendi ac sacrilegos aeterno plectendos igni uociferaretur. sunt homines Talia diu concionantem comprehendunt, ac reum non ad religionem. spretae religionis, sed excitati in populo tumultus agunt peraguntque³; damnatum exilio mulctant: siquidem hoc

^a non nostra, A. recte.

¹ That is, deter.

'impious and sacrilegious Persons.'

² The Latin is not quite so strong, being literally, as Burnet renders it, auncientest lawes amonge them: that no man shalbe blamed for reasonyng in the mayntenaunce of his owne religion¹.

³ Peragere, as a law term, meant 'to prosecute to conviction.'

For kyng Vtopus, euen at the first begynning, hearing that the inhabitauntes of the lande were before his comyng thether at contynuall dissention and stryfe among themselves for their religions; perceyuing also that this common dissention, whyles euerye seuerall secte tooke seuerall partes in fyghting for their countrey, was the only occasion of hys conquest ouer them all; assone as he had gotten the victory, first of all he made a decree, that it shoulde be lawfull for euery man to fauoure and followe what religion he would, and that he myght do the beste he cold to bryng other to his opinion; so that he dyd it peaceably, gentelye, quyety, and soberlye, without hastye and contentious rebuking and inuehyng against interim^a antiquissima instituta numerant, ne sua cuiquam religio fraudi sit.

Vtopus enim iam inde ab initio, quum accepisset incolas ante suum aduentum de religionibus inter se assidue dimicasse, atque animaduertisset eam rem, quod in commune dissidentes singulae pro patria sectae pugnabant, occasionem praestitisse sibi uincendarum omnium, adeptus uictoriam in primis^b sanxit uti quam cuique religionem libeat sequi, liceat; ut uero alios quoque in suam traducat, hactenus niti possit, uti placide ac modeste suam rationibus astruat; non ut acerbe

^a inter, A. recte.

^b A. om. in primis.

¹ As the sentence is an important one, it should be more exactly rendered. It is literally: 'For they reckon this among their most ancient (or, most important) institutions, that no one's religion should be an injury to him;' that is, that no one should be worse off for it. Antiquissima, which Burnet also renders 'most ancient,' may mean 'of most importance;' and I should have thought that was the sense here, but for the mention of Utopus's enactment inde ab initio, which follows. The passage is one to be noted, not only as bearing on More's own views of religious toleration, but as laying down a distinction, significant as coming from him, between punishing an act as an offence against religion, and as an offence against the public peace of the realm. See the next note.

other. If he coulde not by fayre and gentle speche induce them vnto his opinion, yet he should vse no kinde of violence, and refrayne from displeasaunt and seditious wordes. To him that would vehemently and feruently in this cause striue and contend, was decreid bannishment or bondage.

This lawe did kynge Vtopus make, not only for the maintenaunce of peace, which he sawe through continuall contention and mortal hatred vtterly extinguished, but also because he thought this decrye shuld make for the furtheraunce of religion. Wherof he durst define and determine nothing vnadvisedly; as dowting whether god, desieryng manifolde and diuers sortes of honoure, would inspire sondrie men with sondrie kyndes of religion. And this suerly he thought a very vnmete and folishe thing, and a pointe of arrogant presumption, to compell all other by violence and threatenynge to agre to the same that thou beleuest to bee trewe¹. Furthermore though there caeteras destruat, si suadendo non persuadeat; neque uim ullam adhibeat, et conuiciis temperet. peꝛtulantius hac de re contententem ¹⁴⁴ exilio aut seruitute mulctant.

Haec Vtopus^a instituit, non respectu pacis modo, quam assiduo certamine atque inexpiabili odio funditus uidit euerit, sed quod arbitratus est, uti sic decerneretur, ipsius etiam religionis interesse: de qua nihil est ausus temere definire; uelut incertum habens, an uarium ac multiplicem expetens cultum deus aliud inspiret alii. certe ui ac minis exigere et^b quod tu uerum credis idem omnibus uideatur, hoc uero et insolens et ineptum censuit. tum si maxime una uera sit,

^a Vtopienses, A.

^b Sic quoque A. Legend. ut cum B.

¹ More's tone is too serious, and the arguments he makes Utopus employ too solid and convincing, to allow us to regard all this as merely proper to the romance. On the other hand, if the words express to us the author's own thoughts on the subject of religious toleration, how are we to reconcile them with his avowed principles at a later period? The question is a difficult one. It is, of course, easy to offer as a solution a change of opinions, or a revulsion of feeling, caused by the Lutheran outbreak. Dissimiles hic vir et ille puer. But that is only partially satisfactory. There is an oft-quoted passage in Roper's Life (ed. 1822, p. 34), which be one religion whiche alone is trewe, and all other vayne and superstitious, yet did he well forsee (so that the matter were handeled with reason and sober modestie), that the caeterae omnes uanae, facile tamen praeuidit (modo cum ratione ac modestia res agatur) futurum denique ut ipsa per se ueri uis emergat shows that, with the spread of 'heretical' opinions fully before his eyes, he at least doubted the wisdom of suppression of them by force. 'Troth it is indeed, son Roper,' said More (referring to the outward security of the Church in England at the time); 'and yet, son Roper, I pray God, said he, that some of us, as high as we seem to sit upon the mountains treading heretics under our feet like ants, live not the day that we gladly would wish to be at league and composition with them, to let them have their churches quietly to themselves, so that they would be contented to let us have ours quietly to ourselves.' And on these tolerant principles More himself, in the day of his power—if we accept his own statement—would seem to have acted. 'Dyuers of theym,' he says in one place, referring to Protestants, 'haue saide that of suche as were in my house, while I was chauncellour, I vsed to examine theym with tormentes, causinge theym to bee bounden to a tree in my gardeine, and their pituously beaten.' But after explaining the cases (two only) which gave any shadow of justification to these reports, he declares emphatically that 'of al that euer came in my hand for heresy, as helpe me God, sauing as I said the sure keeping of them, and yet not so sure neither but that George Constantine could stele awaye: els had neuer any of them any stripe or stroke giuen them, so muche as a fylpypp on the forehead' (English Works, p. 901).

So far, all would be consistent.

But this picture of More has to be brought into harmony with another, and seemingly very different one. In his epitaph, composed by himself, he is described as 'furious, homicidis, haereticisque molestus.' Erasmus testifies that he fully bore out this description. While he himself professed (Works, p. 925) to hate only the vice of heresy, and not the persons of heretics, his language towards these is harsh and violent, and betokens the strongest personal antipathy. (Ib., pp. 348, 361, c. d., 366 c., 423. &c.). As regards the special cases of Bainham and Tewksbury, alleged by some against More (Foxe: Acts and Monuments, ed. 1846, iv. p. 698, I for one could not discredit More's solemn asseveration, quoted above. But when his biographer pleads that 'in the administration of those laws' (against heresy) 'he was not only rigidly upright, but as tender and merciful as is compatible with the character and office of a judge,' while yet affirming that, 'he held strongly' that the dogmatizing heretics of those days, in the then circumstances of England and Christendom, should be forcibly repressed, and, if necessary punished even by death, according to the existing laws' (Bridgett: Life, p. 271) — many people will feel a difficulty in harmonizing the two pictures. The description of England as 'a country hitherto in perfect peace and unity in religious matters' (ib. 263), is too imaginary a one to contribute much to our enlightenment.— See, for further views of the subject, trewthe of the owne powre¹ woulde at the laste issue owte and come to lyght. But if contention and debate in that behalfe shoulde continuallye be vsed, as the woorste men be moste obstynate and stubburne, and in their euell opynion moste constante; he perceaued that then the beste and holyst religion woulde be troden vnder foote and destroyed by moste vayne superstitions; euen as good corne is by thornes and weydes ouergrowen and choked. Therefore al this matter he lefte vndiscussed, and gaued to euery man free libertie and choise to beleue what he woulde; sauinge that he earnestly and straytelye charged them, that no man shoulde conceaue so vile and base an opinion of the dignitie of mans nature, as to thinke that the sowles do dye and perishe with the bodye; or that the worlde runneth at al auentures, gouerned by no diuine prouidence. And therefore thei beleue that after this lyfe vices be extreamevely punyshed, and vertues bountyfully rewarded. Hym that is of a contrary opinion they counte not in the numbere of men, as one that hath aualed² the hyghe nature of his soule to the vielnes of brute beastes aliquando atque emineat; sin armis et tumultu certetur, ut sint pessimi quique maxime peruicaces, optimam ac sanctissimam religionem ob uanissimas inter se superstitiones, ut segetes inter spinas ac frutices, obrutum iri. Itaque hanc totam rem in medio posuit, et quid credendum putaret liberum cuique reliquit: nisi quod sancte ac seuerē uetuit, ne quis usque adeo ab humanae naturae dignitate degeneret, ut animas quoque interire cum corpore, aut mundum temere ferri sublata prouidentia putaret. atque ideo post hanc uitam supplicia uitiiis decreta, uirtuti praemia constituta credunt; contra sentientem ne in hominum quidem ducunt numero, ut qui sublimem animae suae naturam ad pecuini corpusculi uilitatem deiecerit: tan-

Mr. Sidney Lee's article in the Dict. of National Biography, vol. xxxviii. p. 436; Froude's Erasmus, p. 373; Gairdner: Letters and Papers, v. p. 772; W. S. Lilly, Claims of Christianity, p. 215; Prescott: Ferdinand and Isabella, as before, pp. 593, 594;

Miss Taylor: Memoir of Sir Thomas More, 1834, p. 81; Bishop Creighton: Persecution and Tolerance, 1895, pp. 104-8.

¹ That is, 'that Truth, by its innate force.'

² Lowered, or debased.

bodies; muche lesse in the nombre of their citizens, whoes lawes and ordenaunces, if it were not for feare, he wold nothing at al esteme. For yow may be suer that he wil study other with crafte preuely to mock, or els violently to breake, the commen lawes of his countrey, in whom remayneth no further feare then of the lawes, nor no further hope then of the bodye. Wherefore he that is thus mynded is depryued of all honours, excluded from all offices, and reiecte from all^a common administrations in the weale publyque. And thus he is of all sorte^b despysed as of an vnprofitable and of a base and vile nature. Howe be it they put hym to no punyshemente¹, because they be perswaded that it is in no mans powre to beleue what he lyst. No, nor they constrayne hym not with threatninges to dissemble his minde, and shewe countenance contrary to his thoughte. For deceite, and falshed, and all maner of lyes, as next vnto fraude, they do meruelouslye deteste and abhorre². But they suffre him not to dispute in his

^a [offices . . . all] omitted.

^b sortes.

145 tum abest ut inter ciues ponant, quorum | instituta moresque (si per metum liceat) omnes floccifactor sit. Cui enim dubium esse potest, quin is publicas patriae leges aut arte clam eludere, aut ui nitatur infringere, dum suae priuatim cupiditati seruiat, cui nullus ultra leges metus, nihil ultra corpus spei superest amplius? Quamobrem sic animato nullus communicatur honos, nullus magistratus committitur, nullo publico muneri praeficitur. Ita passim uelut inertis ac iacentis naturae despicitur. Caeterum nullo afficiunt supplicio, quod persuasum habeant, nulli hoc in manu esse ut quicquid libet sentiat. sed nec minis adigunt ullis, animum ut dissimulet suum; nec fucos admittunt et mendacia, quae uelut proxima fraudi mirum quam habent inuisa.

¹ Exclusion from civil offices, to which a man is otherwise entitled to aspire, is itself a punishment. But More no doubt refers to severe or capital punishment (supplicium) in its positive form.

² Compare what More says in his Treatise vpon the Passion (Works,

p. 1384, F.): 'Among al sortes of mischiefe, none can there lightly be fownden more odious vnto God, than when we abuse thinges that be of their owne nature good, and turne them contrariwise to serue vs in our lewdenes. And for this consideracion dothe God much mislike lieng, for that opinion, and that onely¹ among the common people. For elles a parte, among the pryestes and men of grauity, they doo not only suffre but also exhorte him to dispute and argue; hooping that at the laste that madnes will giue place to reason.

There be also other, and of them no small numbere, which be not forbidden to speake their mindes, as grounding their opinion vpon some reason; being in their gliuine^a another euell nor vitious. Their heresy is much contrary to the other. For they beleue that the soules of brute beastes be immortall and euerlasting²; but nothinge to be compared with owers in dignitie, nother ordeyned and^b predestinate to like felicitie. For all they³ beleue certainly and sewerly, that mans blesse shall be so greate, that they doo morne and lamente euerye mans sicknes, but no mans death; oneles it be one whom they see depart from his liffe carfully, and agaynst his will. For this they take for a very euell token, as though the sowle, beinge

^a i. e. livinge.

^b nor.

Verum ne pro sua disputet sententia prohibent, atque id dumtaxat apud uulgus. Nam alioquin apud sacerdotes grauesque uiros seorsum non sinunt modo, sed hortantur quoque, confisi fore ut ea tandem uesania rationi cedat.

Sunt et alii, nec hii sane pauci, nempe improhibiti, ueluti neque ratione penitus pro se carentes, neque mali, qui, uitio longe diuerso, brutorum quoque aeternas esse animas opinantur, at nostris tamen neque dignitate comparandas, neque ad aequam natas felicitatem. hominum enim cuncti fere tam immensam fore beatitudinem pro certo atque explorato habent, ut morbum lamententur omnium, mortem uero nullius, nisi quem uident anxie e uita inuitumque diuelli.

Nempe hoc | pro pessimo habent augurio, tanquam anima exspes 146

the wordes which wer by him ordeined truely to expresse our myndes by, wee falsely peruerte to a quite contrary vse.⁷

¹ That is, the prohibition only applies to disputing, &c.

² For some modern successors of this school, among whom it would seem that John Wesley must be included, see the Rev. Edward White's Life in Christ, ed. 1878, p. 73 n.

³ That is, 'they all.'

in dyspayre and vexed in conscience, through some preuy and secret forefeilyng¹ of the punnishment now at hande, were aferde to depart. And they thinke he shall not be welcome to God, whyche, when he ys called, runneth not² to hym gladly, but ys drawn by force and sore agaynste hys wyll. They therfore that see thys kynde of deathe doo abhorre it, and them that so die they burye wyth sorrow and silence. And when they haue prayed God to be mercifull to the sowle, and mercifully to pardon the infirmities therof, they couer the dead coorpe with earthe.

Contrarye wise, all that depart merely³ and ful of good hoope, for them no man mournethe, but followethe the heerse with ioyfull synging, commending the soules to god with great affection. And at the last not with mourning sorrow, but with a great reuerence, they bourne the bodies⁴; and in the same place they set vp a pillar of ac male conscia occulto quopiam imminentis poenae praesagio reformidet exitum. Ad hoc haudquaquam gratum deo eius putant aduentum fore, qui quum sit accersitus non accurrit libens, sed inuitus ac detrectans pertrahitur. Hoc igitur mortis genus qui intuentur horrent, itaque defunctos moesti ac silentes efferunt, precatique propitium manibus deum, uti eorum clementer infirmitatibus ignoscat, terra cadauer obruunt.

Contra, quicumque alacriter ac pleni bona spe decesserint, hos nemo luget, sed cantu prosequuti funus, animas deo magno commendantes affectu, corpora tandem reuerenter magis quam dolenter concremant, columnaque loco insculptis defuncti titulis erigunt.

¹ That is, 'fore-feeling,' or anticipation.

² 'He would farther say unto them, that, upon his faith, if he might perceive his wife and children would encourage him to die in a good cause, it should so comfort him, that for very joy thereof it would make him merrily run to death.'—Roper's Life of More, ed. 1822, p. 54.

³ That is, merrily. See the preceding note.

⁴ It is noticeable that More assigns cremation to the good, and interment to the bad. This would have been contrary to the feeling of the early Christians. Burial they called the 'veterem et meliorem consuetudinem' (Minucius Felix, Octav. c. 39). Sulla is said to have been the first Roman of note who prescribed for himself the Greek custom of cremation. See the article 'Burial of the Dead' in the Dict. of Christian Antiquities, i. p. 251.

stone, with the deade mans titles therin graued. When they be comme home they reherse his vertuouse maners and his good dedes. But no parte of his liffe is soo oft or gladly talked of as his mery deathe. They thinke that this remembraunce of their vertue and goodnes^a doth vehemently prouoke and enforce the quicke^b to vertue; and that nothing can be more pleasaunt and acceptable to the dead; whom they suppose to be present emong them when they talke of them, though to the dull and feoble eye sight of mortall men they be inuisibly^c. For it were an vnconuenient thinge, that the blessed shoulde not be at libertye to goo whether they wold. And it were a poynte of greate vnkyndnes in them, to haue vtterly caste away the desyer of vysytynge and seyng their frindes¹, to whome they were in theyr lyfe tyme ioyned by mutuall loue and charytye^d; whych in good men after theyre deathe they cownte to be rather encreasede then dynyshede. They beleue therefore that the deade be presentlye conuersaunte emong the quicke, as beholders and witnesses of all their woordes and dedes. Therefore ^a the vertue and goodnes of the dead.

^b liuing.

^c inuisible.

^d amitie.

domum reuersi, mores actaque eius recensent, nec ulla uitae pars aut saepius aut libentius quam laetus tractatur interitus. Hanc probitatis memoriam et uiuis efficacissima rentur incitamenta uirtutum, et gratissimum defunctis cultum putant; quos interesse quoque de se sermonibus opinantur, quanquam (ut est hebes mortalium acies) inuisibiles. Nam neque feliciū sorti conueniat libertate carere migrandi quo uelint, et ingratorum fuerit prorsus abiecisse desyderium amicos inuisendi suos, quibus eos, dum uiuerent, mutuus amor charitasque deuinxerat; quanquam² bonis uiris, ut caetera bona, auctam post fata potius quam imminutam coniectant. Mortuos ergo uersari | inter uiuentes credunt, dictorum factorumque spectatores; 147

¹ A dream of poets in all ages that
'... As ancient sages ween,
Departed spirits, half unseen,
Can mingle with the mortal throng.'

² In a copy of the edition of November, 1518, which I possess, this has been altered to quam; which must be the true reading.

they go more corragiously to their busines, as hauing a trust and affiaunce in such ouerseers. And this same belefe of the present conuersacion of their forefathers and auncetours emonge them feareth them from all secrete dishonesty.

They vtterly despise and mocke sothe sayinges and diuinacions of thinges to come by the flighte or voyces of birdes¹, and all other diuinacions of vayne superstition, which in other countreys be in great obseruation. But they highly esteame and worshippe miracles, that come by no helpe of nature, as workes and witnesses of the presente powre of God². And such they saye doo chauce there very often. And sumtimes in great and dowtefull matters, by comen intercession and prayers, they procure and obteyne them with a suer hoope and confidence and a stedfast beleeffe.

They thinke that the contemplation of nature, and the eoque res agendas fidentius aggrediuntur, talibus uelut freti praesidibus, et ab inhonesto secreto deterret eos credita maiorum praesentia.

Auguria caeterasque superstitionis uanae diuinationes, quarum apud alias gentes magna est obseruatio, negligunt prorsus atque irrident. Miracula uero, quae nullo naturae proueniunt adminiculo, uelut praesentis opera testesque numinis uenerantur; qualia et ibi frequenter extare ferunt: et magnis interdum ac dubiis in rebus publica supplicatione certa cum fiducia procurant impetrantque.

Gratum deo cultum putant naturae contemplationem, laudemque ab

¹ From 'sothe sayings' to 'birdes' is all an equivalent for the single word auguria.

² In the Dialogue concerning Heresies and Matters of Religion, a great part of the first Book (chs. iv-xvii) is taken up with a discussion of the subject of miracles. More elsewhere draws the same distinction as in the text between 'vayne superstition' and true miracles. The test is in their profitableness. 'For that is a good mark betwene Gods miracles and the dyuels wonders. For Christ and hys saintes haue their miracles alway tending to frute and profit. The dyuel and hys wiches and necromancers, al theyr wonderful workes draw to no fruteful end, but to a frutelesse ostentacion and shew, as it were a jugler that woulde for a shew before the people plai masteries at a feast.' — Works, p. 1091 c.

praise thereof cumminge, is to God a very acceptable honour. Yet there be many so earnestly bent and affectioned to religion, that they passe no thinge for learning, nor giue their mindes to no^a knowledge of thinges. But ydelnes they vtterly forsake and eschue, thinkinge felicitie after this liffe to be gotten and obtained by busy labors and good exercises¹. Some therfore of them attende vpon the sicke, some amend highe waies, cense ditches, repaire bridges, digge turfes, grauell, and stones, fell and cleaue woode, bring wood, corne, and other thinges into the cities in cartes, and serue not onlye in commen woorkes, but also in pryuate laboures, as seruantes, yea, more then bondmen. For what so euer vnpleasaunte, harde, and vile worke is any where, from the which labour, lothsumnes, and desperation doth fraye other, all that they take vpon them willingly and gladly; procuring quyete and rest to other; remaying in continuall woorkes and labour them-

^a any.

ea². sunt tamen, hiique haud sane pauci, qui religione ducti, literas negligunt, nulli rerum cognitioni student, neque ocio Vita actiua. prorsus ulli uacant; negociis tantum bonisque in caeteris officiis statuunt futuram post fata felicitatem promereri^a. Itaque alii aegrotis inseruiunt, alii uias reficiunt, purgant fossas, pontes reparant, cespites, arenam, lapides effodiunt, arbores demoliuntur, ac dissecant, bigisque ligna, fruges, item alia in urbes important, nec in publicum modo sed priuatim quoque ministros ac plus quam seruos agunt. Nam quicquid usquam operis est asperum, difficile, sordidum, a quo plerosque labor, fastidium, desperatio deterreat, hoc illi sibi totum libentes hilaresque desumunt. caeteris ocium procurant, ipsi perpetuo in opere ac labore uer[santur], nec imputant 148

^a promoueri, A.

¹ More may have been thinking, when he wrote this, of the 'Brethren of the Common Life,' at whose school in Deventer the early years of Erasmus were passed. They 'differed from the mendicant orders in the fact that they did not beg, but, on the contrary, maintained themselves by manual labour, having at least a partial community of goods, and distinguished generally by their strict lives and fervent devotion.'—Drummond: Erasmus, 1873, i. p. 8.

² Partam, or some similar word, seems wanting.

selfes; not embaynding others there wyth. They nother reprove other mens liues, nor glorye in theire owne. Thies men, the more seruiseable¹ they behaue them selfes, the moore they be honoured of all men.

Yet they be diuided into ii. sectes. The one is of them that liue single and chast, absteyning not only from the company of women, but al so from the^a eating of flesh, and some of them from al maner of beastes². Which, vtterly reiectyng the pleasures of this present lyffe as hurtefull, be all hollye set vpon the dessire of the lyffe to come; by watchyng and sweatyng hoping shortely to obtaine it, beyng in the meane season meerye and lustye. The other sect is no lesse desyerous of labour, but they embrace matrimony; not despising the solace therof; thinking that they can not be discharged of theire tamen, nec aliorum sugillant uitam, nec suam efferunt. Hii quo magis sese seruos exhibent, eo maiore apud omnes in honore sunt.

^a the omitted.

Eorum tamen haereses duae sunt. Altera caelibum, qui non Venere modo in totum abstinent, sed carniū esu quoque, quidam animalium etiam omnium, reiectisque penitus tanquam noxiis uitae praesentis uoluptatibus, futurae duntaxat per uigilias ac sudores inhiant, eius propediem obtinendae spe alacres interim uegetique. Altera laboris haud minus appetens coniugium praefert, ut cuius nec aspernantur solatium, et opus naturae debere se et patriae liberos putant. Nullam

¹ Not serviceable, in our sense, but 'as servants,' or slaves. Burnet has: 'by their stooping to such servile Employments, they are . . . the more esteemed,' &c.

² 'Beastes' here, as a rendering of animalium, is a more extensive term than 'flesh' (carnium); just as bestia in Latin may include fowl or fish. Hence the meaning is that, while some abstained from all that we should call butcher's meat, others abstained even from 'white-meats' as well, and were absolute vegetarians. As an example of the former may be taken the rule of the Carthusians of Shene: 'For your diet, it is a perpetuall abstinence from flesh, in so much that in the greatest or most dangerous sicknes you can expect no dispensation therein: also a good parte of the yeare wee abstaine from all whitmeates, as in Advent, Lent, and all the Fridayes of the yeare . . .' Formulare Carthusianorum, Lansdowne MSS., No. 1201, leaf 2 b. The practice of St. Benedict himself was an example of the latter, and still more austere, practice.

bounden duetyes towardes nature withoute labour and tiolet, nor towardes their natiue countreye, wythowte procreacion of chyldren. They abstayne from no pleasure that dothe nothyng hynder them from laboure. They loue the fleshe of fourefoted beastes, bycause they beleue that by that meate they be made hardier and stronger to woorke¹. The Vtopians count this secte the wiser, but the other the hollier. Which, in that they preferre single liffe before matrimony, and that sharpe liffe before an easier liffe, if herin they grounded vpon reason, they wold mock them; but now, forasmuch as they say they be ledde to it by religion, they honour and worship them². And thies be they whome in their language by a peculyare name they call Buthrescas³, the whyche woorde by interpretation signifieth to vs men of religion, or religiousmen.

They haue pryestes of exceding hollines, and therefore uoluptatem refugiunt, quae nihil eos ab labore demoretur. Carnes quadrupedum uel eo nomine diligunt, quod tali cibo se ualidiores ad opus quodque censeant. Hos Vtopiani prudentiores, at illos sanctiores reputant. Quos quod caelibatum anteferunt matrimonio, asperamque uitam placidae anteponunt, si rationibus niterentur, irrideret: nunc uero quum se fateantur religione duci, suspiciunt ac reuerentur. Nihil enim sollicitius obseruant, quam ne temere quicquam ulla de religione pronuncient. Huiusmodi ergo sunt, quos illi peculiari nomine sua lingua Buthrescas uocant, quod uerbum latine religiosos licet interpretari.

Sacerdotes habent eximia sanctitate, eoque admodum paucos. neque

¹ The language of right reason, and justified, with proper qualifications, by St. Paul: 1 Cor. vi. 12, 1 Tim. iv. 3, 4, 1 Cor. viii. 13. In the De quatuor nouissimis, towards the end, More has much on the text 'meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God will destroy both it and them.' In the present passage he gives due weight to the words that precede that text, 'all things are lawful for me.' Compare Luther's Table Talk, ed. 1872, § dvii.

² The next sentence in the Latin is omitted by Robynson. Burnet renders it: 'There is nothing in which they are more cautious, than in giving their Opinion positively concerning any Sort of Religion.'

³ The word, as More himself explains its meaning just after, is evidently formed to express 'very devout,' as if βούθησκος, on the analogy of βούπαις.

very few¹. For there be but xiii.² in euery city, according to the number of their churches, sauynge when they go furth to battell. For than vii. of them goo furthe wyth the armye: in whose steades so manye newe be made at home. But the other, at theyre retourne home, agayn reentre euery one into his own place. They that be aboute the nombre, vntyll suche tyme as they succede into the places of the other at theyre dyinge, be in the meane season continuallye in companie wyth the bishoppe. For he ys the chyeffe heade of them all. They be chosen of the people as the other magistrates be, by secrete voices for the a—³... they be consecrate of their owne company. They be ouerseers of all deuyne matters, orderers of religions, and as it were jugers and maisters of maners. And it is a great dishonestye and shame to be rebuked or spoken to by anny of them for dissolate and incontinent liuing.

149 enim plus quam tredecim in singulis habent urbibus, pari templorum numero, nisi quum itur | ad bellum. tunc enim septem ex illis cum exercitu profectis totidem sufficiuntur interim. sed illi reuersi suum quisque locum recuperat: qui supersunt, hii, quoad decedentibus illis ordine succedant^a, comites interea sunt Pontificis. Nam unus reliquis praeficitur. Eliguntur a populo; idque, caeterorum ritu magistratum, occultis ad studia uitanda suffragiis: electi a suo collegio consecrantur. Hii rebus diuinis praesunt, religiones curant, ac morum ueluti censores sunt; magnoque pudori ducitur ab hiis quenquam, tanquam uitae parum probatae, accersi compellariue.

^a succedunt, A.

¹ There is probably a touch of satire in this, but not of necessity, since those who are eximii in any qualifications will naturally be few. More censures Dorp for making a similar remark about the bishops of his time: — ‘quorum, ut sunt certe nonnulli tanto digni fastigio, ita mira est paucitas.’ Lucubrations, p. 421.

² Perhaps with reference to the thirteen apostles. See, for instances of such choice of numbers, the Rev. J. H. Blunt’s Introduction to the Myroure of oure Ladye, 1873, p. xx.

³ A line is here omitted in the edition of 1551 between the first syllable of ‘auoydinge’ and ‘they be consecrate.’ The ed. of 1556 supplies it: ‘uoyding of strife. After their election’.

But as it is their offyce to gyue good exhortations and counsell, so it is the duty of the prince and the other magistrates to correct and punnyshe offenders; sauynge that the priestes, whome¹ they find exceeding vicious liuers, them they excommunicate from hauing any interest in diuine matters. And there is almoost no punnishment emonge them more feared. For they runne in veye great infamy, and be inwardly tormented with a secrete feare of religion, and shall not long scape free with their bodies. For onles they, by quycke repentaunce approue the amendement of their lyffes to the priestes, they be taken and punished of the counsell as wycked and irreligious².

Both childhode and youth is instructed, and tought of them. Nor they be not more deligente to instructe them in learning then in vertue and good maners. For they vse with very greate endeuour and deligence to put into the heades of their children, whiles they be yet tender and pliaunt, good opinions and profitable for the conser-

Caeterum ut hortari atque admonere illorum est, ita coercere atque in facinorosos animaduertere principis atque aliorum est magistratum; nisi quod sacris interdicit, quos improbe malos comperiunt: nec ullum fere supplicium est quod horreant magis. Nam et summa percelluntur infamia, et occulto religionis metu lacerantur, ne corporibus quidem diu futuris in tuto. quippe ni properam poenitentiam sacerdotibus approbent, comprehensi impietatis poenam Senatui persoluunt.

Pueritia iuuentusque ab illis eruditur, nec prior literarum cura quam morum ac uirtutis habetur. namque summam adhibent industriam, ut bonas protenus opiniones et conseruandae ipsorum reipub-

¹ Burnet brings out the sense more clearly: 'The severest thing that the Priest does, is the excluding those that are desperately wicked from joining in their worship.'

² Lat. impietatis poenani persoluunt. This was a being delivered over to the secular arm. But it does not touch the subject of punishment for religious opinions, as those only are spoken of here as being seized by the council, whom the priests have pronounced to be improbe malos.

uation of their weale publique. Which, when they be ones rooted in children, do remayne wyth them all their lyfe after, and be wonders profitable for the defence and maintenaunce of the state of the commen wealthe; which neuer decaieth, but through vicis risinge of euell opinyons.

The pryestes, onles they be women¹ (for that kynd is not excluded from pryesthode; howbeit fewe be chosen, and none but widdowes and old women): the men priestes, I saye, take to their wifes² the chiefest women in all their countreye. For to no office emong the vtopians is more licae utiles teneris adhuc et sequacibus puerorum animis instillent; quae ubi pueris penitus insederint, uiros per totam uitam comitantur, 150 magnamque ad tuendum publicae rei | statum (qui non nisi uitiis dilabitur, quae ex peruersis nascuntur opinionibus) afferunt utilitatem.

Sacerdotibus (ni foeminae sint, nam neque ille sexus excluditur, sed rarius, et non nisi uidua natuque grandis eligitur) uxores sunt popularium selectissimae. Neque enim ulli apud Vtopienses magistratui maior habetur sacerdotes.

Foeminae

¹ It would be hard to say whether this is a mere jeu d'esprit, or whether More had any more serious thought in making women eligible for the priesthood in Utopia. He may have had in his mind the greater natural devoutness of their sex, as Cicero had when he wrote to Terentia: 'Neque dii, quos tu castissime coluisti, neque homines, quibus ego semper serui, nobis gratiam retulerunt.' (Epp. ad Diu. xiv. 4). Or perhaps, with daughters educated as were his own, often discussing at home the homilies they heard in church, it may have been jestingly remarked that one of them would be better qualified to discharge the teaching office, at least, of the priesthood than some of the preachers on whom he is occasionally so severe. But when he thought that a playful suggestion was in danger of being advocated in earnest, More could become bitterly contemptuous. 'For hys heresy,' he writes, referring to

Tyndall, 'rekeneth euerye woman a prest, and as able to say masse as euer was saynte Peter. And in good faythe, as for suche masses as he woulde haue sayde . . . I wene a woman were in dede a more mete priest than saynt Peter.'—Fifth Book of the Confutation: Works, p. 623.

² In the Supplication of Soules (Works, p. 308), when writing of the existing priesthood of the Church, bound to celibacy, More's language is in violent contrast to that used in the text. The marginal note: 'The mariage of priestes is incestuose,' is a very mild summary of the passage. Elsewhere (ib. p. 485), speaking of the celibacy of priests as an abstract principle, he admits that 'the church both knoweth and confesseth, that wedlocke and priesthod be not repugnant but compatible of their nature, and that wedded men haue been made priestes and kept styll theyr wiues.'

honour and preeminence geuen. In so much that if they committ any offence, they be vnder no commen iudgement, but be left only to god and themselves¹. For they thinke it not lawfull to touch him with mannes hande, be he neuer so vityous, whiche after so singuler a sort was dedicate and consecrate to god as a holly offering. This maner may they easely obserue, bicause they haue so few priestes, and do chuse them with such circumspection. For it scasely euer² chaunceth that the most vertuous emong vertuous, which in respect only of his vertue is auanced to so high a dignity, can fal to vice and wickednes. And if it should chaunce in dede (as mans nature is mutable and fraile), yet by reason they be so few³ and honos, usque adeo ut si quid etiam flagitii admiserint, nullo publico iudicio subsint: deo tantum ac sibi relinquuntur. Neque enim fas putant illum, quantumuis scelestum, mortali manu contingere, qui Deo tam singulari modo uelut anathema Excommunicatio. dedicatus est. Qui mos illis facilius est obseruatu, quod sacerdotes et tam pauci et tanta cum cura deliguntur. Nam neque temere accidit, ut qui ex bonis optimus ad tantam dignitatem, solius respectu uirtutis, euehitur, in corruptelam et uitium degeneret. et si iam maxime contingeret, ut est mortalium natura mutabilis, tamen qua sunt paucitate, nec ulla praeter

¹ We may infer from this, which side More would have been likely to take in the great controversy lately stirred between the two parties of which Standish and Kidderminster were the representatives. The text noli tangere Christos meos expressed the view of the Abbot of Winchcombe. See Brewer's Reign of Henry VIII, i. p. 250. Colet, in his Convocation Sermon, delivered in 1512, gives a guarded assent to the same view:— 'Ye wyll haue the churches liberte,' he says to the assembled clergy 'and nat be drawn afore secular iuges: and that also is ryght. For hit is in the psalmes: Touch ye nat myne anynted. But if ye desire this liberte, first vnlose your selfe from the worldlye bondage, and from the seruices of men; and lyfte vp your selfe in to the trewe lybertie, the spirituall lybertye of Christe, in to grace from synnes; and serue you God, and raygne in hym. And than, beleue me, the people wyll nat touche the anynted of theyr Lorde God.'

² Lat. neque temere, 'it does not lightly chance.'

³ The sarcastic marginal note to the Latin, at this point, should be observed.

promoted to no might nor powre, but only honour, it were not to be feared that anye great dammage by them should happen and ensue to the commen wealth. They haue so rare and few priestes, least, if the honour were communicate to many, the dignity of the ordre, which among them now is so highly estemed, should runne in contempt; speciallye bicause they thinke it harde to find many so good, as to be meet for that dignity, to the execution and discharge wherof it is not sufficiente to be endued with mean vertues.

Furthermore, thies priestes be not more estemed of their owne countrey men, then they be of forrein and straung countreis. Which thing maye hereby plainly appere. And I think al so that this is the cause of it. For whiles the armes be fighting together in open feld, they a litle beside, not farre of, knele vpon their knees in their hallowed vestimentes, holding vp theyr handes to heauen; praying first of all for peace, nexte for vyc-tory of theyr owne parte, but to néyther part a bluddy vyc-tory¹. If their host gette the vpper hand, they runne in

* to honour.

honorem potestate praediti, ad publicam certe perniciem nihil magni ab his momenti pertimescendum sit. Quos ideo tam raros atque infrequentes habent, ne dignitas ordinis, quem nunc tanta ueneratione prosequuntur, communicato cum multis honore, uilisceret; praesertim quum difficile putent frequentes inuenire tam bonos, ut ei sint dignitati pares; ad quam gerendam non sufficit mediocribus esse uirtutibus.

At apud nos
quanta turba
est.

151 Nec eorum aestimatio apud suos magis quam apud exteris etiam gen-tes habetur, quod inde facile patet unde etiam natum puto. Nempe decernentibus praelio copiis, seorsum illi non admodum procul considunt in genibus, sacras induiti uestes: tensis ad caelum palmis, primum omnium pacem, proxime suis uictoriam, sed neutri cruentam parti, comprecantur. uincentibus suis decurrunt in aciem, sae-

O sacerdotes nostris longe sanctiores.

¹ The picture drawn is more suggestive of Moses praying on the mount during the battle against the Amalekites (Exod. xvii. 12), than of the con-to the mayne battayle, and restrayne theyre owne men from sleying and cruelye pursuyng theire vanquyshed ennemies. Whyche ennemyes, yf they do but see them and speake to them, yt ys ynoughe for the sauegarde of theyr lyues; and the towchyng of their clothes defendeth and saueth al their gooddes from rauyne and spoyle. Thys thing hath auanced them to so greate wourshyp and trew maiesty emong al natonis^a, that many times they haue aswel preserued their own citzens from the cruel force of their ennemies, as they haue their enemies from the furyous rage of theyre owne men. For yt ys well knownen that when their owne army hathe reculed, and in dyspayre turned backe, and runne away, theyr ennemies fyerslye pursuing with slaughter and spoyle, then the priestes cumming betwene haue stayed the murder, and parted bothe the hostes; so that peace hath bene made ^a i. e. nations.

uientesque in profligatos inhibent. uidisse tantum atque appellesse praesentes ad uitam satis; diffluentium contactus uestium reliquas quoque fortunas ab omni bellorum iniuria defendit. Quae ex re apud omnes undique gentes tanta illis ueneratio, tantum uerae maiestatis accessit, ut saepe ab hostibus non minus salutis ad ciues reportarint, quam ab ipsis ad hostes attulissent; siquidem aliquando constat, inclinata suorum acie, desperatis rebus, quum ipsi in fugam uerterentur, hostes in caedem ac praedam ruerent, interuentu sacerdotum interpellatam stragem, ac diremptis inuicem duct of great ecclesiastics in More's own time. With his abhorrence of war between Christian princes (one of the three evils, to secure the abolition of which he would gladly have been 'put in a sack and presently cast into the Thames') More would not look with a kindly eye on the martial energy of Pope Julius II, 'more like to that Caesar, whose Name hee bare, then Peter, from whom he would faine deriue his Succession,' or on the campaigns directed by Ximenes, in whom

'the spirit of the soldier burned strong and bright under his monastic weeds.' Even to prelates like those who fell at Flodden, fighting simply as brave soldiers for their country—the Archbishop of St. Andrew's, the Bishops of Caithness and of the Isles, the Abbots of Inchaffray and Kilwinning, and others—while his sympathy would be with them as patriots, the description in the text would serve as a silent reproach.—See Roper's Life, p. 24; Godwyn's Annales, 1630, p. 9.

and concluded betwene bothe partes vpon equall and indyfferent condytions. For there was neuer anny natyon so fiers, so cruell and rude, but they hadde them in suche reuerence, that they cownted theyr bodyes hallowed and sanctyfyed, and therefore not to be violentlye and vnreuerentlye towched.

They kepe hollye daye^a the fyrste and the laste day of euerye moneth and yeare, deuydyng the yeare into monethes; whyche they measure by the course of¹ the moone, as they doo the yeare by the course of the sonne. The fyrste dayes they call in theyr language Lynemernes¹, and the laste Trapemernes; the whyche woordes maye be interpreted primifeste and finifest; or els, in our speache, first feast and last feast.

Their churches be very gorgyous, and not onelye of ^a daye omitted.

copiis pacem aquis condicionibus esse compositam atque constitutam. Neque enim unquam fuit ulla gens tam fera, crudelis ac barbara, apud quos ipsorum corpus non sacrosanctum atque iniuiolabile sit habitum.

Festos celebrant initialem atque ultimum cuiusque mensis diem, et anni item, quem in menses partiuntur, circuitu lunae finitos, ut solis ambitus annum circinat². Primos quosque dies Cynemernos, postremos ipsorum lingua Trapemernos appellant; quae uocabula

Festorum dierum apud Vtopienses obseruatio.

152 perinde sonant, ac si primifesti et finifesti uocentur.

Delubra uisuntur egrègia, utpote non operosa modo, sed, quod

¹ Why Robynson should give the word in this form, when the Latin texts have uniformly Cynemernos, is not clear. Possibly he had a notion that More must have been thinking of Luna, as a suitable element in his imaginary name for the first day of the month, and that Cynemernos was thus a misprint. It is more likely that the word is meant to suggest κυν-ημερῖός, 'the dog's day of the month,' strictly the night between the old and new, when food was placed out at the cross-roads, and the barking of the dogs was taken as a sign of the approach of Hecate. See Theocr. Idyll. ii. 35, 36. So in like manner τραπ-ημερῖός would express the turning or closing day of the month.

² Comp. 'Anni tempora circinante Phoëbo,' Sidon. Pan. 3382.

fyne and curious workemanship, but also (which in the fewenes of them was necessary) very wyde and large, and able to receaue a great company of people. But they be all sumwhat darke. Howbeit, that was not donne through ignoraunce in buylding, but as they say by the cownsell of the priestes. Bicause they thought that ouer much light doth disperse mens cogitations; where as in dimme and doutefull lighte¹ they be gathered together, and more earnestly fixed vpon religion and deuocion. Which bicause it is not there of one sort emong all men; and yet all the kindes and fassions of it, though they be sondry and manifold, agree together in the honoure of the deuine nature, as going diuers wayes to one ende; therefore nothing is sene nor hard in the churches, which^a semeth not to agre indifferently with them all. If there be a distinct kind of sacrifice, peculiare to any seuerall secte, that they execute at home in their owne houses. The common sacrifices be so ordered, that they be no derogatyon nor preiudyce to annye of the pryuate sacryfyces and religions².

^a but that.

erat in tanta ipsorum paucitate necessarium, immensi etiam populi Temp^la cuiusmodi. capacia. Sunt tamen omnia subobscura; nec id aedificandi inscitia factum, sed consilio sacerdotum ferunt, quod immodicam lucem cogitationes dispergere, parcio^re ac uelut dubia colligi animos et intendi religionem putant.
 quae quoniam non est ibi apud omnes eadem, et uniuersae tamen eius formae, quanquam uariae ac multiplices, in diuinae naturae cultum uelut in unum finem diuersa uia commigrant, idcirco nihil in templis uisitur auditorue, quod non quadrare ad cunctas in commune uideatur.
 Si quod proprium sit cuiusque sectae sacrum, id intra domesticos quisque parietes curat; publica tali peragunt ordine, qui nulli prorsus ex priuatis derogat.

¹ This will at once recall the 'dim religious light' of Il Penseroso. A little less familiar may be the couplet from Pope's Eloisa to Abelard:—

'Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
 And the dim windows shed a solemⁿ light.'

² Compare what More says just afterwards about the public prayers.

Therefore no ymage of anny god is seene in the churche ; to the intente it maye be free for euery man to conceyue god by their religion after what likenes and similitude they will. They call vpon no peculiar name of god, but only Mithra¹. In the which word they all agree together in one nature of the deuine maiesty, whatsoever it be. No prayers be vsed, but such as euerye man maye boldelye pronownce wythowt the offending of anny secte.

They come therefore to the churche the laste day of euery moneth and yeare, in the euenyng, yet fastyng, there to gyue thanckes to God for that they haue prosperouslye passed ouer the yeare or monethe, wherof that hollye daye ys the laste daye. The next daye they come to the churche earlye in the mornyng, to praye to God that they maye haue good fortune and successe all the newe yeare or monethe, whyche they doo begynne of that same hollye daye. But in the hollye dayes that be the laste dayes of the monethes and yeares, before they come to the churche, the wiffes fall downe prostrat before their husbandes feete at home ; and the children before the feete of their parentes ; confessing and acknowleginge that they

Itaque nulla deorum effigies in templo conspicitur, quo liberum cuique sit qua forma deum uelut e summa religione concipere. nullum peculiare dei nomen inuocant, sed Mythrae duntaxat, quo uocabulo cuncti in unam diuinae maiestatis naturam, quaecunque sit illa, conspirant. nullae concipiuntur preces, quas non pronounciare quiuis inoffensa sua secta possit.

Ad templum ergo in finifestis diebus uespere conueniunt, adhuc ieiuni, acturi deo de anno menseue cuius id festum postremus dies est, prospere acto gratias. Postero die, nam is primifestus est, mane 153 ad templa confluitur, ut | insequentis anni mensisue, quem ab illo auspicatori festo sint, faustum felicemque successum comprehendant. At in finifestis, antea quam templum petunt, uxores domi ad uirorum pedes, liberi ad parentum prouoluti, peccasse fatentur

¹ The Persian name for the Sun-god. See above, p. 267, and comp. Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, § 53. For the way in which More makes the old Utopian language to be connected with the Persian, see p. 148 n.

haue offended^a other by some actual dede, or by omission of their dewty, and desire pardon for their offence¹. Thus yf anye cloude of preuy displeasure was risen at home, by this satisfaction it is ouer blowen; that they may be present at the sacrifices with pure and charitable mindes². For they be aferd to come there with troubled consciences. Therefore, if they knowe themselves to beare anye hatred or grudge towardes anye man³, they presume not to come to the sacrifices before they haue reconcyled themselves and purged theyre consciences, for feare of greate vengeance and punysmente for their offence.

When they come thyther, the men goo into the ryghte syde of the churche, and the the^b women into the left syde⁴. There they place themselves in suche ordre that ^a [that . . . offended] themselves offenders.

^b so repeated.

sese aut admissio aliquo, aut officio indiligerter obito, ueniam-Confessio que errati precantur. ita si qua se nubecula do-Vtopiensium. mesticæ simultatis offuderat, tali satisfactione discu-
 At apud nos, titur, uti animo puro ac sereno sacrificiis intersint.
 qui sunt inquina- nam interesse turbido, religio est. eoque odii iræue tissimi, aris in quenquam sibi consci, nisi reconciliati ac defecatis proximi esse affectibus ad sacrificia non ingerunt sese, uindictæ contendant. celeris magnaue metu.

Eo quum ueniunt, uiri in dextram delubri partem, faeminae seorsum in sinistram commeant; tum ita se collocant, ut cuiusque domus

¹ The author of Philomorus sees in this a possible slight put upon the practice of confession to the priest alone (2nd ed., p. 128; cf. p. 238). But, as he justly says, 'the Utopia cannot be referred to as containing the writer's settled opinion upon the subjects which are introduced.'

² With the severe tone of the Latin marginal note here, compare the apostrophe into which Colet breaks out, in his Treatises on the Hierarchies, p. 90.

³ The reader will note the similarity between this and a passage in the rubric before the Communion Service in the Book of Common Prayer: 'The same order shall the Curate use with those betwixt whom he perceiveth malice and hatred to reign; not suffering them to be partakers of the Lord's Table, until he know them to be reconciled.'

⁴ This custom of the separation of the sexes in Christian Churches is at least as old as the Apostolical Constitutions. Besides its being the com-

all they which be of the male kind in euery household sitte before the goodman of the house ; and they of the female kynde before the goodwyfe. Thus it is forsene¹ that all their gestures and behaiours be marked and obserued abrode of them, by whose authoritye and discipline they be gouerned at home. This also they diligentlye see vnto, that the yonger euermore be coupled with his elder ; lest, if children be^a ioyned together, they shold passe ouer that time in childish wantonnes, wherin they ought principallye to conceaue a religious and deuout feere towards god ; which is the chieffe and almost the only incitation to vertue.

They kill no liuing beast in sacrifice, nor they thinke not that the mercifull clemency of god hath delite in bloud and slaughter ; which hath geuen liffe to beastes, to the intent they should liue. They burne franckensence and other sweet sauours², and light also a great numbere of masculi ante patremfamilias consideant^a, foeminarum materfamilias agmen claudat. Ita prospicitur uti omnes omnium gestus foris ab iis obseruentur, quorum autoritate domi ac disciplina reguntur. quin hoc quoque sedulo cauent, uti iunior ibi passim cum seniore copuletur, ne pueri pueris crediti id temporis puerilibus transigant ineptiis, in quo deberent maxime religiosum erga superos metum, maximum ac prope unicum uirtutibus incitamentum, concipere.

^a [if . . . be] children beinge.

Nullum animal in sacrificiis mactant, nec sanguine rentur ac caedibus diuinam gaudere clementiam, qui uitam animantibus ideo est elargitus, ut uiuerent. Thus incendunt et alia item odoramenta. ad

^a Leg. considant.

mon practice in his own time, More may have noticed the allusion to it in St. Augustine, when lecturing on the De Civitate (Lib. II. c. 28):—‘quia populi confluent ad ecclesias casta celebritate, honesta utriusque sexus discretione.’

¹ That is, provided for.

² Dionysius Pseudo-Areopagita is said to be the earliest writer who testifies to the ritual use of incense in churches. Colet, in his abstract of the Hierarchies (Ecl. Hier. iii. § 3), draws out the symbolical meaning, that the sweet odour of incense ‘is a sign of the Almighty’s fragrant love.’ ‘This assuredly,’ he says, ‘the fuming of incense, beginning from the altar, and thence proceeding through the whole temple, and returning to the waxe candelles and tapers¹; nott supposinge this geere to be any thing auaylable to the diuine nature, as nother the prayers of men; but this vnhurtfull and harmeles kind of worship pleaseth them. And by thies sweet sauoures, and lightes, and other such ceremonies, men feele themselves secretly lifted vp, and encouraged to deuotion, with more willynge and feruent hartes. The people weareth in the church white apparell: the priest is clothed in changeable coloures, whiche in workemanshyps be excellent, but in stufte not verye pretious. For their vestementes be nother embrodered with golde, nor set with precious stones; but they be wrought so fynely and conyngly with diuers fetheres of fowles², that the estimation of no costelye stufte is able to counteruaile the price

haec ceireos numerosos praeferunt, non quod haec nesciant nihil ad 154 diuinam conferre naturam, quippe ut nec ipsas hominum preces, sed et innoxium colendi genus placet, et hiis odoribus luminibusque, ac caeteris etiam ceremoniis, nescio quomodo sese sentiunt homines erigi, atque in dei cultum animo alacriore consurgere. Candidis in templo uestibus amicitur populus; sacerdos uersicolores induitur, et opere et forma mirabiles, materia non perinde preciosa. neque enim auro intextae, aut raris coagmentatae lapidibus, sed diuersis auium plumis tam scite tantoque artificio laboratae sunt, ut operis precium place whence it set forth, signifies in sacred and solemn manner to the unlearned; that herein, if they are able, they may perceive that sweet-smelling grace is diffused far and wide over all from the high place of God.'

¹ For the profusion of wax candles and tapers which would meet the eye in St. Paul's Cathedral, see Dr. W. S. Simpson's Registrum Statutorum, p. 74. Their plenty may have been in part a cause of Dean Colet's well-known ordinance for his newly-founded school.

² More's selection of this fanciful apparel for his priests may have been in pure whim, or in the endeavour to find something totally different from existing customs. But the thought may possibly have been suggested to him by the study of his favourite Plato. In the Timaeus the race of birds is created out of 'innocent, light-minded men, who thought to pursue the study of the heavens by sight: these were transformed into birds, and grew feathers instead of hair.'—See Professor Jowett's Introduction to the Timaeus (Plato, 1871, ii. p. 502). What Socrates says also in the Phaedo, § 85, about birds having a prophetic gift from Apollo, and singing for joy but never for sorrow, deserves to be compared.

of the worke. Furthermore, in thies birdes fethers, and in the dewe ordre of them, whiche is obserued in their setting, they saye is conteyned certayn deuyne misteries; the interpretation wherof knowen, whiche is diligently taught by the priestes, they be put in remembraunce of the bountyfull benefites of God towarde them, and of the loue and honoure whiche of their behalfe is dewe to God, and also of their dewties one towarde an other.

When the priest first commeth out of the vestrie, thus apparelled, they fall downe incontinent euery one reuerently to the grounde, with so styll silence on euery part, that the very fassion of the thinge striketh into them a certayne feare of God, as though he were there personally presente. When they haue lien a little space on the grounde, the priest giueth them a signe for to ryse. Then they sing prayes vnto God, whiche they intermixt with instrumentes of musick, for the moste parte of other fassions then thies that we vse in this parte of the worlde. And like as some of owrs bee muche sweter then theirs, so some of theirs doo farre passe owrs¹. But in one nullius aestimatio materiae fuerit aequatura. Ad hoc in illis uolucrum pennis plumisque et certis earum ordinibus, quibus in sacerdotis ueste discriminantur, arcana quaedam dicunt contineri mysteria, quorum interpretatione cognita (quae per sacrificos diligenter traditur) diuinorum in se beneficiorum, suaeque uicissim pietatis in deum, ac mutui quoque inter se officii, admoneantur.

Quum primum sacerdos ita ornatus ex adyto sese offert, cuncti protinus in terram uenerabundi procumbunt, tam alto ab omni parte silentio, ut ipsa rei facies terrorem quendam uelut praesentis cuiuspiam numinis incutiat. Tellure paulum morati, dato ab sacerdote signo, erigunt sese. tum laudes deo canunt, quas musicis instrumentis interstinguunt, aliis magna ex parte

Musica
Vtopiensium.

155 ple|raque sicuti quae nobis in usu sunt multum suauitate uincunt, ita quaedam nostris ne conferenda quidem sint. Verum

¹ More, who used often to don a Chelsea, was well qualified to express surplice, and sing in the choir at an opinion on this subject. It seems thynges dowteles they goo excedinge farre beyond vs. For all their musicke, both that they playe vpon instrumentes, and that they singe with mans voyse, doth so resemble and expresse naturall affections; the sounde and tune is so applied and made agreeable to the thyng; that whether it bee a prayer, or els a dytty of gladnes, of patience, of trouble, of mournynge, or of anger, the fassion of the melodye dothe so represente the meaning of the thing, that it doth wonderfullie moue, stire, pearce, and enflame the hearers myndes¹.

una in re haud dubie longo nos interuallo praecellunt; quod omnis eorum musica, siue quae personatur organis, siue quam uoce modulatur humana, ita naturales affectus imitatur et exprimit, ita sonus accommodatur ad rem; seu deprecantis oratio sit, seu laeta, placabilis, turbida, lugubris, irata; ita rei sensum quendam melodiae forma repraesentat, ut animos auditorum mirum in modum afficiat, penetret, incendat.

clear, from more than one contemporary account, that the church music of the day, at least in England, had become too elaborate and artificial, the sound leaving the sense far behind. Thus Polydore Vergil complains that 'our syngers cry out so loude, that we heare nothing saue a noyse, and those that be present cannot be edified with the word.' 'It were great furtherance to religion,' he adds, 'yf those singers, not far unlike to Jayes, wer ether banished out of the Temples, or els their singing wer so modified with more sobernesse, that the wordes might be understande, to thedifying of the laytie.'—Thomas Langley's Abridgemente of the Notable Worke of Polidore Vergil, s. a., leaf 114 b. Compare what Erasmus says in the De sarcienda Ecclesiae concordia: 'Si non placet in templis illud modulatae musicae genus, et organorum cantus, possunt citra pietatis iacturam omitti: Si placet, curandum est ut illa quoque musica sit digna templo Dei'; and the striking passage which occurs in his note on 1 Cor. xiv. 19 in the Annotationes:—'In sacram aedem uelut in theatrum concurritur, ad deliniendas aures . . . Haec adeo placent, ut monachi nihil aliud agant, praesertim apud Britannos; et quorum cantus debuit esse luctus, hi lasciuus hinnitus et mobili gutture Deum placari credunt.'

¹ Richard Pace, whose own skill in music had commended him as a boy to the notice of Thomas Langton, Bishop of Winchester, gives a high place in his De Fructu to that art, which teaches men 'et orare bene et concionari' (ed. 1517, p. 32). But the best commentary on what More has written in the text is furnished by some sensible remarks of Erasmus towards the end of his Christiani Matrimonii Institutum (a treatise which he dedicated to Queen Katharine). After complaining of the licentious tone of much secular ballad-music, especially

At the laste the people and the priest together rehearse solempne prayers in woordes, expresslye pronounced¹; so made that euerye man may priuatlye applye to hymselfe that which is commonlye spoken of all². In thies prayers euerye man recogniseth and knowledgeth God to be hys maker, hys gouernoure, and the principal cause of all other goodnes; thankyng him for so many benefites receaued at hys hande: but namelye, that through the faouere of God he hath chaunced into that publyque weale, whiche is moste happye and welthye, and hath chosen that religion whyche he hopeth to be moste true. In the whyche thyng yf he doo annye thyng erre, or yf there bee annye other better then eyther of them is, beyng moore acceptable to GOD, he desiereth hym that he wyll

Solennes ad ultimum conceptis uerbis preces sacerdos pariter populusque percensent, ita compositas ut quae simul cuncti recitant, priuatim quisque ad semet referat. In his deum et creationis et gubernationis et caeterorum praeterea bonorum omnium quilibet recognoscit autorem; tot ob recepta beneficia gratias agit, nominatim uero quod deo propitio in eam rempublicam inciderit quae sit felicissima, eam religionem sortitus sit, quam speret esse uerissimam. Qua in re si quid erret, aut si quid^a alterutra melius, et quod deus magis

^a si quid sit, A.

in the Low Countries, he urges, in words like those of More, the power of music for good or evil: 'Numerosi illi soni magnam uim habent ad afficiendos hominum animos, in tantum ut quidam hinc collegerint ipsam animam esse harmoniam, aut certe habere harmoniam, nam simile simili delectari' (ed. 1526, leaf C). He goes on to censure the style of music introduced into divine worship. 'Quid quod hoc musices genus a choreis et comensationibus inueximus in templa? Et, quod est absurdus, magno conducuntur, qui sacrorum maiestatem inceptis garritibus contaminent. Non excludo Musicam a sacris, sed harmonias requiro sacris dignas. Nunc sonis nequissimis aptantur uerba sacra.'

¹ Burnet, more correctly, 'in a set Form of Words.'

² See above, p. 290. Erasmus often pleads for the like simple and comprehensive formulas. 'Adferamus fidei professionem simplicem, uereque Apostolicam,' he says, speaking of the efforts to convert the Turks, '. . . in paucis facilius erit consensus, et facilius constabit concordia, si in plerisque liberum erit in suo cuique sensu abundare, tantum ut absit contentio.' Adagia, ed. 1629, p. 301, col. b.

of hys goodnes let hym haue knowledge thereof, as one that is readye too followe what waye soeuer he wyll leade hym. But yf thys forme and fassion of a comen wealthe be beste, and his owne religion moste true and perfecte, then he desyreth God to gyue him a constaunte stedfastnes in the same, and to brynge all other people to the same ordre of luyng, and to the same opinion of God; onles there be any thyng that in this dyuersitie of religions doth delyte his vnsearcheable pleasure. To be shorte, he prayeth hym that after his deathe he may come to hym¹; but how soone or late, that he dare not assygne or determine. Howebeit, if it myght stande with his maiesties pleasure, he would be muche gladder to dye a paynfull dethe and so to go to God, then by long luyng in worldye prosperytie to bee awaye from hym. Whan this prayer is sayde, they fall downe to the ground agayne, and a lytle after they ryse vp and go to dynner. And the resydewe of the daye they passe ouer in playes, and exercise of cheualrye².

approbet, orare se eius bonitas efficiat hoc ut ipse cognoscat: paratum enim sequi se qua qua uersus ab eo ducatur. sin et haec Reipublicae forma sit optima, et sua religio rectissima, tum uti et ipsi constantiam tribuat, et caeteros mortales omnes ad eadem instituta uiuendi, in eandem de deo opinionem perducatur, nisi inscrutabilem eius uoluntatem etiam sit quod in hac | religionum uarietate delectet. Denique 156 precatur, ut facile defunctum exitu ad se recipiat; quam cito seroue, praefinire quidem non audere se. Quanquam, quod inoffensa eius maiestate fiat, multo magis ipsi futurum cordi sit, difficillima morte obita ad deum peruadere, quam ab eo diutius prosperrimo uitae cursu distineri. Hac prece dicta rursus in terram proni, pauloque post erecti, discedunt pransum; et quod superest diei ludis et exercitio militaris disciplinae percurrunt.

¹ Robynson neglects the facile in the Latin. Burnet is more correct. 'Then they pray that God may give them an easy Passage at last to himself.'

² It was one of the reforms petitioned for by the Cardinal of Cambray at the Council of Constance, that on festivals, all but Sundays and the majores feriae, the lay people might be allowed, when divine service was over, to return to work: 'liceret operari post auditum officium; cum

Nowe I haue declared and descrybyd vnto yowe, as truly as I coulde, the fourme and ordre of that commen wealth, which verely in my iudgement is not onlye the beste, but also that whiche alone of good ryght may clayme and take vpon it the name of a common wealthe or publique weale. For in other places they speake stil of the commen wealth; but euerye man procureth hys owne pryuate wealthe^a. Here where nothyng is pryuate, the commen affayres be earnestly loked vpon. And truly on both partes they haue good cause so to do as they do. For in other countreys who knoweth not that he shall sterue for honger, onles he make some seuerall prouision for hymself, though the commen wealthe floryshe neuer so muche in ryches? And therefore he is compelled, euen of veye necessitie, to haue regarde to hym selfe rather then to the people, that is to saye, to other. Contrarywyse, there where all thynges be commen to euerye man, it is not to be dowted¹ that any man shal lacke anye thyng necessarye for hys pryuate vses, so that the commen store howses and barnes be sufficientlye ^a gaine.

Descripsi vobis quam potui uerissime eius formam Reipublicae, quam ego certe non optimam tantum, sed solam etiam censeo, quae sibi suo iure possit Reipublicae uendicare uocabulum. Siquidem alibi de publico loquentes ubique commodo priuatam curant; hic ubi nihil priuati est, serio publicum negotium agunt, certe utrobique merito. Nam alibi, quotus quisque est qui nesciat, nisi quid seorsum prospiciat sibi, quantumuis florente Republica semet tamen fame periturum; eoque necessitas urget ut sui potius quam populi, id est aliorum, habendam sibi rationem censeat. Contra hic, ubi omnia omnium sunt, nemo dubitat (curetur modo ut plena sint horrea publica) nihil quicquam priuati cuiquam defuturum. Neque enim maligna quia in festis saepe multiplicantur peccata, in tabernis, in choreis, et aliis lasciuia quas docet otiositas, tum quia dies operabiles vix sufficiunt pauperibus ad vitae necessaria procuranda.—Fasciculus rerum expetend., &c., 1535, fol. 206 B.

¹ That is, feared.

stored. For there nothyng is distrybuted after a nyggyshe sorte, nother there is any poore man or begger. And though no man haue any thyng, yet euerye man is ryche. For what can be more ryche then to lyue ioyfullye and merylye without all grieffe and pensifenes; not caryng for hys owne lyuing, nor vexed or trowbled with hys wyfes importunate complayntes, not^a drydyng pouertie to his sonne, nor sorrowyng for his dowghters dowrey? Yea, they take no care at all for the luyng and wealth of themselfes¹ and all theirs; of their wyfes, their chyl-dren, their nephewes², their childrens chyl-dren, and all the succession that euer shall followe in their posteritie. And yet, besydes thys, there is no lesse prouision for them that were ones labourers, and be nowe weake and impotent, then for them that do nowe laboure and take payne.

Heere nowe woulde I see yf anye man dare be so bolde, as to compare with thys equitye the iustice of other nations. Among whom, I forsake God³, if I can fynde any signe rerum distributio est, neque inops, neque mendicus ibi quisquam, et quum nemo quicquam habeat, omnes tamen diuites sunt. Nam quid ditius esse potest, quam, adempta prorsus omni sollicitudine, laeto ac tranquillo animo uiuere? non de suo uictu trepidum, non uxoris querula flagitatione uexatum, non paupertatem filio metuentem, non de filiae dote anxium; sed de suo suorumque omnium, uxoris, filiorum, nepotum, pronepotum, abnepotum, et quam longam posterorum seriem suorum generosi praesumunt, uictu esse ac felicitate securum. Quid quod nihilo minus his prospicitur, qui nunc impotes olim laborauerunt, quam his qui nunc laborant?

^a nor.

Hic aliquis uelim cum hac aequitate audeat aliarum iustitiam gentium comparare, apud quas dispeream si ullum prorsus comperio

¹ The printing being indistinct, it is not clear whether this or 'themsel'es' is the word.

² In the old sense of 'nephews,' as in 1 Tim. v. 4. The Latin terms used are those for the successive stages in lineal descent. Compare the language of Budé, above, p. lxxxvi.

³ Lit. 'may I perish, if,' &c.

or token of equitie and iustice. For what iustice is this, that a ryche goldsmythe¹ or an vsurer, or, to be shorte, any of them, whyche other doo nothyng at all; or els that whiche they do is suche, that it is not very necessary to the commen wealthe; should haue a pleasaunt and a welthy lyuyng, other by Idilnes, or by vnnecessary busynes? when in the meane tyme poore labourers, carters, yronsmynes, carpenters, and plowmen, by so great and continual toylē, as drawyng and bearyng beastes be skeant able to susteine; and agayn so necessary toyle that with out it no commen wealth were able to continewe and endure one yere; do^a yet get so harde and poore a lyuing, and lyue so wretched and miserable a lyfe, that the state and condition of the labouring beastes maye seme muche better and welthier. For they be not put to so contynuall labour, nor their lyuyng is not muche worse; yea, to them much pleasaunter; takyng no thowghte in the meane season for the tyme to come. But thies seilie poore wretches be presently tormented

^a should.

iustitiae aequitatisque uestigium. Nam quae haec iustitia est, ut nobilis quispiam, aut aurifex, aut foenerator, aut denique alius quisquam eorum, qui aut omnino nihil agunt, aut id quod agunt eius generis est ut non sit Reipublicae magnopere necessarium, lautam ac splendidam uitam, uel ex ocio uel superuacuo negotio, consequatur, quum interim mediastinus, auriga, faber, agricola, tanto tamque assiduo labore quam uix iumenta sustineant, tam necessario ut sine eo ne unum quidem annum possit ulla durare Respublica, uictum tamen adeo malignum parant, uitam adeo miseram ducunt, ut longe potior uideri possit conditio iumentorum, quibus nec tam perpetuus labor, nec uictus multo deterior est, et ipsis etiam suauior, nec ullus interim de futuro timor. At hos et labor sterilis atque infructuosus in goldsmiths, who were accustomed to traffic largely in the precious metals, and who had vaults in which great masses of bullion could be secure from fire and from robbers.' Hist. of England, ed. 1858, iv. p. 492.

¹ We should now rather say, a banker. It was not till the Restoration that banking became a distinct occupation in England. And this new branch of business, as Macaulay says, 'naturally fell into the hands of the

with barreyne and vnfrutefull labour. And the remembrance of their poore indigent and begerlye olde age kylleth them vp. For their dayly wages is so lytle that it will not suffice for the same daye; muche lesse it yeldeth any ouerplus, that may dayly be layde vp for the relyefe of olde age.

Is not thys an vniust and an vnkynd publyque weale, whyche gyueth great fees and rewardes to gentelmen, as they call them, and to goldsmythes¹, and to suche other, whiche be other ydell persones or els onlye flatterers, and deuyzers of vayne pleasures; and, of the contrary parte, maketh no gentle prouision for poore plowmen, coliaris, laborers, carters, yronsmythes, and carpenters; without whome no commen wealth can continewe? But when^a it hath abused the laboures oft heire lusty and flowringe age, at the laste, when they be oppressed with old age and syckenes, being nedye, poore, and indigent of all thynges; then, forgettynge their so many paynfull watchynges, not remembrynge their so many and so great benefytes; recompenseth and acqyrteth them moste vnkyndly with miserabile death. And yet besides this the riche men not

^a after.

praesenti stimulat, et inopis recordatio senectutis occidit; quippe quibus parciore est | diurna merces, quam ut eidem possit diei sufficere: tantum abest ut excrescat et supersit aliquid quod quotidie queat in senectutis usum reponi. 158

An non haec iniqua est et ingrata respublica, quae generosis, ut uocant, et aurificibus, et id genus reliquis, aut ociosis aut tantum adulatoribus et inanium uoluptatum artificibus, tanta munera prodigit; agricolis contra, carbonariis, mediastinis, aurigis et fabris, sine quibus nulla omnino Respublica esset, nihil benigne prospicit; sed eorum florentis aetatis abusa laboribus, annis tandem ac morbo graues, omnium rerum indigos, tot uigiliarum immemor, tot ac tantorum oblita beneficiorum, miserrima morte repensat ingrattissima. Quid quod ex diurno pauperum demenso diuites cotidie aliquid, non only by priuate fraud, but also by commen lawes, do euery day plucke and snatche away from the poore some parte of their daily liuing. So, where as it semed before uniuste to recompense with vnkyndnes their paynes that haue bene beneficiall to the publique weale, nowe they haue to this their wrong and vniuste dealinge (whiche is yet a muche worse pointe), geuen the name of iustice¹, yea, and that by force of a law.

¹ See the note above, p. 301.

Therefore when I consider and way in my mind all thies commen wealthes which now a dayes any where do flourish, so god helpe me, I can perceauē nothing but a certē conspiracy of riche men, procuringe their owne commodities vnder the name and title of the commen wealth. They inuent and deuise all meanes and craftes, first how to kipe safely without feare of lesing that they haue vniustly gathered together; and next how to hire and abuse the woorke and labour of the poore for as litle modo priuata fraude sed publicis etiam legibus abradunt: ita quod ante uidebatur iniustum, optime de Republica meritis pessimam referre gratiam, hoc isti deprauatum etiam fecerunt, tum prouulgata lege iustitiam.

Itaque omnes has quae hodie usquam florent Respublicas animo intuenti ac uersanti mihi, nihil, sic me amet deus, occurrit aliud quam quaedam conspiratio diuitum, de suis commodis Rei-publicae nomine tituloque tractantium. comminiscunturque et excogitant omnes modos atque artes quibus, quae malis artibus ipsi congesserunt, ea primum ut absque perdendi metu retineant, post hoc ut pauperum omnium opera ac laboribus² quam minimo sibi redimant, eisque³ abutuntur. Haec

Haec annota, lector.

³ eisque pro iumentis, B.

¹ Burnet gives what must be the general sense of this passage: 'So that, though it is a Thing most unjust in it self, to give such small Rewards to those who deserve so well of the Publick, yet they have given those Hardships the Name and Colour of Justice, by procuring Laws to be made for regulating them.' But the Latin is obscure, at least if the tum before prouulgata be correct.

² The ablative is apparently due to attraction with eisque just afterwards. In this case opera must also be taken as ablative. But the proper construction would be opera (n. pl.) ac labores.

money as may be. Thies deuyses when the riche men haue decreed to be kept and obserued for the commen wealthes sake^a, that is to saye, for the wealth^b also of the poore people, then they be made lawes. But thies most wicked and vicious men, when they haue by their vnstable couetousnes deuided emong them selves all those thinges which wold haue suffised all men, yet howe farre be they from the wealth and felicity of the vtopian commen wealth? owt of the which in that all the desire of moneye with the vse therof is vtterly secluded and banished, howe great a heape of cares is cut away? How great an occasion of wickednes and mischief is plucked vp by the rotes? For who knoweth not that fraud, theft, rauine, brauling, quarelling, brabbling, striffe, chiding, contention, murder, treason, poisoning; which by dayly punishmentes are rather reuenged then refrained; do dye when money dieth? And also that feare, grieffe, care, laboures, and watchinges, do perishe, euen the very same moment that money perissheth? Yea, pouerty it selfe, which only semed to lacke money, if money were gone, it also wold decrease and vanishe away.

^a [for . . . sake] vnder coloure of the comminaltie.

^b [for . . . wealth] omitted.

machinamenta ubi semel diuites publico nomine, hoc est etiam pauperum, decreuerunt obseruari, iam leges fiunt. At homines deterrimi cum inexplebili cupiditate, quae fuerant omnibus suffectura, ea omnia inter se partiuerint, quam longe tamen ab Vtopiensium Reipublicae felicitate absunt? e qua cum ipso usu sublata penitus omni auiditate pecuniae, quanta moles molestiarum recisa, quanta scelerum seges radicitus euulsa est? Quis enim nescit fraudes, furta, rapinas, rixas, tumultus, iurgia, seditiones, caedes, prodiones, ueneficia, cotidianis uindicata potius quam refrenata suppliciiis, interempta pecunia commori; ad haec metum, sollicitudinem, curas, labores, uigilias, eodem momento quo pecunia perituras? quin paupertas ipsa, quae sola pecuniis uisa est indigere, pecunia prorsus undique sublata, protinus etiam ipsa decresceret^a.

^a decesceret, A.; dicesceret, B.

And that you may perceave this more plainly, consider with your selves some barrein and vnfrutefull yeare, wherin many thousandes of people haue starued for honger. I dare be bolde to say, that in the end of that penury so much corne or grain might haue bene found in the riche mens barnes, if they had bene searched, as being deuided emong them, whome famine and pestilence hath killed^a, no man at all should haue felt that plage and penury. So easely might men gett their liuinge, if that same worthye princesse, lady money¹, did not alon stoppe vp the way betwene vs and our liuing; whiche a goddes name was very excellently deuised and inuented, that by her the way therto should be opened. I am sewer the ryche men perceave thys, nor they be not ignoraunte how much better yt werre to lacke noo necessarye thyng then to abunde with ouermuch superfluyte; to be rydde owte of innumerable cares and trowbles, then to be beseiged wyth^b greate ryches. And I dowte not that other the respecte of euery mans priuate commoditie, or els the authority of oure sauioure Christe (which for his great

^a [hath killed] then consumed.

^b and encombred wyth.

Id quo fiat illustrius, reuolue in animo tecum annum aliquem sterilem atque infoecundum, in quo multa hominum millia fames abstulerit. contendo plane in fine illius penuriae, excussis diuitum horreis, tantum frugum potuisse reperiri, quantum si fuisset inter eos distributum, quos macies ac tabes absumpsit, illam caeli solique parcitatem nemo omnino sensisset. tam facile uictus parari posset, nisi beata illa pecunia, quae praeclare scilicet inuenta est, ut aditus ad uictum per eam patesceret, sola nobis ad uictum uiam intercluderet. Sentiant 160 ista, non dubito, etiam diuites, nec ignorant quanto potior esset illa conditio nulla re necessaria carere, quam multis abundare superfluis; tam numerosis eripi malis, quam magnis obsideri diuitiis. Neque mihi quidem dubitare subit, quin uel sui cuiusque commodi ratio, uel CHRISTI seruatoris autoritas (qui neque pro tanta sapientia potuit pecunia here; and beata, in the sense of 'affluent,' is a common epithet of ubertas, copia, and the like.

¹ 'That blessed Thing, called Money' (Burnet). There is nothing to show that More meant to personify

wisdom could not but know what were best, and for his inestimable goodnes cold not but counsell to that which he knew to be best) wold haue brought all the wordle long agoo into the lawes of this weale publike, if it were no that one only beast, the prince^a and mother of all mischiefe, pride¹, doth withstonde and let it. She measureth not wealth and prosperity by here own commodities, but by the miseriies and incommodities of other. She wold not by her good will be made a goddes, if there were no wretches left, whom she might be lady ouer to mocke and scorne^b; ouer whose miseries her felicity might shine, whose pouerty she might vexe, torment, and encrease by gorgiously setting furthe her riches. This hell hound crepeth in to mens hartes, and plucketh them backe from entering the right pathe of liffe; and is so depely roted in mens brestes, that she can not be plucked out.

This forme and fassion of a weale publike, which I wold gladly wisse vnto all nations, I am glad yet that it

^a princesse. ^b [whom . . . scorne] ouer whom she might like a scorneful ladie rule and triumph.

ignorare quid optimum esset, neque qua erat bonitate id consulere quod non optimum sciret) totum orbem facile in huius Reipublicae leges iamdudum traxisset, nisi una tantum belua, omnium princeps parensque pestium, superbia, reluctaretur. haec non suis commodis prosperitatem, sed ex alienis metitur incommodis. haec ne Dea quidem fieri uellet, nullis relictis miseris, quibus imperare atque insultare possit; quorum miseriis praefulgeat ipsius comparata felicitas; quorum suis explicatis opibus angat atque incendat inopiam. Haec auerni serpens, mortalium pererrans pectora, ne meliorem uitae capessant uiam, uelut remora retrahit ac remoratur.

Quae quoniam pressius hominibus infixae est, quam ut facile possit euelli, hanc Reipublicae formam, quam omnibus libenter optarim,

^a Haec adnotatio deest in B.

¹ Dibdin here refers to the chapter on Pride in More's treatise De quatuor nouissimis, in evidence of the detestation in which this vice was held by the author. See the English Works, 1577, pp. 82, 1270; and the extracts given by Bridgett: Wit and Wisdom, pp. 55-58.

hath chaunced to the Vtopians; which haue followed those institutions of liffe, wherby they haue laid such fondations of their common wealth, as shall continew and last, not only wealthely, but also, as farre as mans wit maye iudge and coniecture, shall endure for euer. For seinge the chiefe causes of ambition and sedition with other vices be plucked vp by the rootes and abandoned at home, there can be no ieopardye of domesticall dissention; which alone hathe caste vnder fote and broughte to noughte the well fortified and strongly defenced wealth and riches of many cities. But for asmuch as perfect concord remaineth, and holsome lawes be executed at home, the enuy of all forrein princes be not able to shake or moue the empire, though they haue many tymes long ago gone about to do it, beinge euermore dreuen backe.'

Thus when Raphaell hadde made an ende of his tale, thoughe manye thinges came to my mind which in the manners and lawes of that people semed to be instituted and founded of no good reason¹, not only in the fassion of their cheualry and in their sacrifices and religions, and in

Vtopiensibus saltem contigisse gaudeo; qui ea uitae sunt instituta sequuti, quibus Reipublicae fundamenta iecerunt non modo felicissime, uerum etiam, quantum humana praesagiri coniectura contigit, aeternum duratura. Extirpatis enim domi cum caeteris uitiiis ambitionis et factionum radicibus, nihil impendet periculi ne domestico 161r dissidio laboretur, quae | una multarum urbium egregie munitas opes pessundet. At salua domi concordia et salubribus institutis non omnium finitimorum inuidia principum (quae saepius id iam olim semper reuerberata tentauit) concutere illud imperium aut commouere queat.

Haec ubi Raphael recensuit, quanquam haud pauca mihi succurrebant, quae in eius populi moribus legibusque perquam absurde uidebantur instituta, non solum de belli gerendi ratione, et rebus diuinis, ac religione, aliisque insuper eorum institutis, sed in eo

¹ This is weaker than the Latin, perquam absurde, 'very absurdly.'

other of their lawes, but also, yea and chieffely, in that which is the principall fondacion of al their ordinaunces, that is to saye, in the communitie of their liffe and liuinge, without anny occupieng of money; by the whyche thynge onelye all nobilitie, magnificence, wourship, honour, and maiestie, the true ornamentes and honoures, as the common opinion is, of a common wealth, vtterly be ouerthrowen and destroyed; yet, bicause I knew that he was wery of talkinge, and was not sure whether he coulde abide that any thing shoulde be said againste hys minde; speciallye bicause I remembred^a that he had reprehended this fault in other, which be aferd least they shoulde seme not to be wise enough, onles they could find some fault in other mens inuentions: therfore I, praising both their institutions and his communication, toke him by the hand, and led him into supper; saying that we wold chuse an other time to way and examine the same matters, and to talke wyth him more at lardge therin. Whiche wold to^b God it might ones come to passe. In the mean time as I can not agree and consent to all thinges that he said; being els without dowte a man singulerly well learned, and also in all wordely^c matters exactly and profoundly

^a speciallye remembrynge.^b to omitted.^c worldely.

quoque ipso maxime, quod maximum totius institutionis fundamentum est, uita scilicet uictuque communi, sine ullo pecuniae commercio, qua una re funditus euertitur omnis nobilitas, magnificentia, splendor, maiestas, uera (ut publica est opinio) decora atque ornamenta Reipublicae; tamen, quoniam defessum narrando sciebam, neque mihi satis exploratum erat, possetne ferre ut contra suam sententiam sentiretur, praesertim quod recordabar eo nomine quosdam ab illo reprehensos, quasi uererentur ne non satis putarentur sapere, nisi aliquid inuenirent in quo uellicare aliorum inuenta possent, idcirco et illorum institutione et ipsius oratione laudata, manu apprehendens intro coenatum duco; praefatus tamen aliud nobis tempus iisdem de rebus altius cogitandi atque uberius cum eo conferendi fore. Quod utinam aliquando contingeret. interea, quemadmodum haud possum 162 omnibus assentiri quae dicta sunt, alioqui ab homine citra controuer-experienced; so must I nedes confesse and graunt, that many thinges be in the vtopian weal publike, which in our cities I may rather wisse for then hoope after.

Thus endeth the afternones talke of Raphaell Hythlodaye concerning the lawes and institutions of the Iland of Vtopia.

¶ Imprinted at London

by Abraham Vele, dwelling in Pauls churcheyarde at the sygne of the Lambe. Anno.

1551.

siam eruditissimo simul et rerum humanarum peritissimo, ita facile confiteor permulta esse in Vtopiensium republica, quae in nostris ciuitatibus optarim uerius quam sperarim.

SECVNDI LIBRI FINIS.

SERMONIS POMERIDIANI RAPHAELIS HY
THLODAEI, DE LEGIBVS ET INSTITV-
TIS VTOPIENSIS INSVLAE PAVCIS
ADHVC COGNITAE, PER CLA-RISSIMVM ET ERVDITISSI-
MVM VIRVM D. THOMAM
MORVM CIVEM ET VI-CECOMITEM LON-DINENSEM, FINIS.

APPENDIX FROM THE ORIGINAL

JEROME BUSLEYDEN

TO THOMAS MORE

GREETING¹.

IT was not enough, my accomplished friend More, that you formerly spent all your care, labour and study upon the interests and advantage of individuals; but you must bestow them (such is your kindness and generosity) on the community at large. You thought that this benefit of yours, whatever it might be, deserved the greater indulgence, courted the greater favour, and aimed at the higher renown, on this very account, that it was likely to profit the more; the more widely it was diffused and the more there were to share it. To confer this benefit has always been your object on other occasions, and of late you have,

HIERONYMVS

BVSLIDIVS THOMAE

MORO S.D.

NON SAT FVIT ORNATISSIME More, olim omnem curam, operam, studium intulisse in rem et commodum singulorum, nisi uel ea (quae tua pietas et liberalitas est) conferres in uniuersum, ratus hoc tuum quaecumque foret beneficium eo maiorem hinc mereri^a fauorem, uenari gratiam, aucupari gloriam, quanto illud et latius propagatum, et in plures distributum, pluribus esset profuturum. Quod et si alias semper praestare contenderis, tamen id

^a morari, C.

¹ This letter, which was not translated by Robynson, came before the Utopia, in the edition of 1516, but in that of 1518 was placed after it, as here. For Busleyden see above, p. xcv.

with singular good fortune, been most successful in attaining it: I mean, in that 'afternoon's talk,' which you have reduced to writing and published, about the right and good constitution, that all must long for, of the Utopian commonwealth.

In your happy description of that fair institution, we nowhere miss either the highest learning or consummate knowledge of the world. Both those qualities are blended together in the work, meeting on such equal terms that neither yields to the other, but both contend on an equality for the palm. The truth is, you are the able possessor of such varied learning, and on the other hand of so wide and exact a knowledge of the world, that, whatever you write, you assert from full experience, and, whatever assertion you have decided to make, you write most learnedly. A felicity this as rare as it is admirable! What makes it rarer is that it withholds itself from the many, and only imparts itself to the few;—to such above all as have the candour to wish, the knowledge to understand, the credit which will qualify, and the influence which will enable them to consult the common interest as dutifully, justly, and providently as you now plainly do. For, deeming yourself born not for yourself alone, but for the whole maxime es nuper mira felicitate adsecutus, scilicet pomeridiano illo sermone abs te in literas relato, quem de recte et bene constituta, ab omnibus expetenda, Vtopiensium republica aedidisti.

In cuius pulcherrimi instituti felici descriptione nihil est in quo uel summa eruditio, uel absoluta rerum humanarum peritia desyderari possit; quando ea quidem ambo in illo tanta paritate et aequabili congressu concurrunt, ut, neutro alteri herbam porrigente¹, utrumque aequo Marte de gloria contendat. Tam siquidem multifaria polles doctrina, rursus tam multa eaque certa rerum peritia, ut prorsus expertus affir|mes quicquid scripseris, doctissime scribas quicquid 163^b affirmandum destinaueris. Mira profecto raraque felicitas, ac plane eo rarior, quo magis ipsa sese inuidens plurimis non praebet nisi raris, maxime iis, qui, sicut candore uelint, ita eruditione sciunt, fide queant, autoritate possint, tam pie, recte, prouide in commune consulere, sicut tu iam facis probe, qui quod non solum tibi, uerum etiam world, you have thought fit by this fair service to make the whole world itself beholden to you.

¹ Plin. Hist. Nat. xxii. 4.

And this result you would not have been able to effect so well and rightly by any other means, as by delineating for rational beings themselves an ideal commonwealth, a pattern and finished model of conduct, than which there has never been seen in the world one more wholesome in its institution, or more perfect, or to be thought more desirable. For it far surpasses and leaves a long way behind the many famous states, that we have heard so much about, of Sparta and Athens and Rome. Had these been inaugurated under the same favourable conditions, with the same institutions, laws, enactments and rules of life to control them as this commonwealth of yours, they would not, we may be sure, have by this time been lying in ruins, levelled with the ground, and now alas! obliterated beyond all hope of renewal. On the contrary, they would have been still unfallen, still fortunate and prosperous, leading a happy existence, mistresses of the world meanwhile, and dividing a widespread empire by land and sea.

Of these commonwealths you compassionated the untoti te genitum^a orbi existimas, operae precium duxeris hoc tuo pulcherrimo merito uel totum ipsum orbem demereri.

Quod praestare alia ratione neque rectius neque melius potuisses, quam ipsis mortalibus ratione pollentibus eam reipublicae ideam, eam morum formulam absolutissimumque simulacrum praescribere; quo nullo^b unquam in orbe uisum sit uel salubrius institutum, uel magis absolutum, uel quod magis expetendum uideatur; utpote multo quidem praestante, atque longo post se interuallo relinquirente tot celebratissimas tantopere decantatas Lacedaemoniorum, Atheniensium, Romanorum reipublicas. Quae si iisdem essent auspiciis auspicate, iisdem quibus haec tua respublica institutis, legibus, decretis, moribus moderatae, profecto hae nondum labefactatae et solo aequatae iam pro dolor citra spem omnem instaurationis extinctae iacerent; sed contra incolumes adhuc, beatae, felices, fortunatissime agerent; interim rerum dominae, suum late imperium terra marique sortitae.

Quarum quidem rerum publicarum tu miserandum miseratus

^a gentium, B.

^b sic et A. Leg. nullum.

happy lot. And so you wished to save other states in like manner, which now hold the supreme power, from undergoing a like vicissitude, by your picture of a perfect state; one which directed its chief energies not so much to framing laws as to appointing the most approved magistrates. (And with good reason: for otherwise, without them, even the best laws, if we take Plato's ¹ word for it, would all be counted dead.) Magistrates these, above all, after whose likeness, pattern of uprightness, ensample of conduct, and mirror of justice, the whole state and right course of any perfect commonwealth whatever ought to be modelled; wherein should unite, above all things, prudence in the rulers, courage in the soldiers, temperance in the private individuals, and justice in all ².

And since the commonwealth you make so famous is manifestly formed, in fairest manner, of these principles, it is no wonder if on this account it comes not only as an object of fear to many, but also of reverence to all nations, and one for all generations to tell of; the more so,

sortem, ne aliae itidem, quae | hodie rerum potitae summum tenent, 164
parem sustinerent uicem, prospicere uoluisti, scilicet hac tua absolutissima republica; quae non tam in condendis legibus quam uel probatissimis magistratibus formandis maxime elaborauit. Nec id quidem ab re: quando alioqui sine illis omnes uel optimae leges, si Platoni credimus, mortuae censerentur; praesertim ad quorum magistratuum simulacrum, probitatis specimen, exemplar morum, iusticiae imaginem, totus status et rectus tenor cuiusuis absolutae reipublicae sit effingendus; in quo in primis concurrant prudentia in optimatibus, fortitudo in militibus, temperantia in singulis, iusticia in omnibus.

Quibus quum tua, quam tantopere celebras, respublica sit tam pulcherrime, ut liquet, composita, non mirum si hinc ueniat non solum multis timenda, sed et cunctis gentibus ueneranda, simul omnibus saeculis praedicanda; idque eo magis quod in ea, omnis

¹ See the De Legibus, Lib. vi. (§ 751, B, C).

² This is a brief summary of the Fourth Book of the Republic, the object of which is to show that the wisdom of the ideal State will reside in the Guardians or Magistrates, the courage in the Soldiers or Auxiliaries, and the political temperance in the general body of citizens. Justice, like a common bond, keeps all classes in their place. See the Introduction, above, p. lii.

that in it all competition for ownership is taken away, and no one has any private property at all. For the rest, all men have all things in common, with a view to the commonwealth itself; so that every matter, every action, however unimportant, whether public or private, instead of being directed to the greed of many or the caprice of a few, has sole reference to the upholding of one uniform justice, equality and communion. When that is made the entire object of every action, there must needs be a clearance of all that serves as matter and fuel and feeder of intrigue, of luxury, envy, and wrong; to which mankind are hurried on, even at times against their will, either by the possession of private property, or by the burning thirst of gain, and that most pitiable of all things, ambition, to their own great and immeasurable loss. For it is from these things that there often suddenly arise divisions of feeling, taking up of arms, and wars worse than civil; whereby not only is the flourishing state of wealthy republics utterly overthrown, but the renown they won in other days, the triumphs celebrated, the splendid trophies, the rich spoils so often won from conquered enemies, are all utterly effaced.

If on these matters the words I write should chance to be less convincing than I desire, there will at any rate 164^b proprietatis contentione sublata, nulli sit quippiam proprii. Caeterum in rem ipsam communem communia sunt omnibus omnia; adeo ut omnis res, quaevis actio, seu publica seu priuata, non ad multorum cupiditatem, non ad paucorum libidinem, spectet; sed ad unam iusticiam, aequabilitatem, communionem sustinendam, quantulacunque sit, tota referatur. Quo illa integre relata, omnis materies, fax, et fomes ambitus, luxus, inuidientiae, iniuriae, facessat necesse est; in quae nonnunquam aut priuata rerum possessio, aut ardens habendi sitis, omniumque miserriima rerum ambitio, mortales uel reluctantes protrudit, maximo suo idque incomparabili malo; quando hinc saepe numero dissensiones animorum, motus armorum, et bella plus quam ciuilia derepente oriantur, quibus non solum florentissimus status beatissimarum rerumpublicarum funditus pessumdatur, uerum illarum olim parta gloria, acti triumphi, clara trophaea, totiesque opima spolia deuctis hostibus relata, penitus oblitterantur.

Quod si in his haec nostra pagina minorem forte ac uelim fidem be ready at hand the most sufficient witnesses for me to refer you to : I mean, the many great cities formerly laid waste, the states destroyed¹, the republics overthrown, the villages burnt and consumed. As scarce any relics or traces of their great calamity are to be seen at this day, so neither are their names preserved by any history, however ancient it be, and however far back its records extend.

These memorable disasters, devastations, overthrows, and other calamities of war our states, whatever they be, will easily succeed in escaping, if they only adapt themselves exactly to the one pattern of the Utopian commonwealth, and do not deviate a hair's-breadth from it. By so acting alone, they will at length most fully recognize by the result how greatly they have profited by this service you have rendered them ; especially since by its acquisition they have learnt to preserve their own state in safety, unharmed, and victorious. It follows that their debt to you, their present deliverer, will be no less than is the just due of those, who have saved—I do not say some one member of a state, but the whole state itself.

fecerit, certe in promptu aderunt testes ad quos te relegem locupletissimi, uidelicet, tot et tantae olim uastatae urbes, dirutae ciuitates, prostratae respublicae, incensi et consumpti uici ; quorum uti hodie uix ullae tantae calamitatis reliquiae aut uestigia uisuntur, ita nec nomina illorum ulla ^a quantumuis uetus et longe deducta historia sat probe tenet.

Quas quidem insignes clades, uastationes, euersiones, caeterasque belli calamitates, nostrae si quae sint respublicae facile euaserint, modo ad unam Vtopiensium reipublicae normam sese adamussim componentes ab ea ne transuersum quidem, ut aiunt, unguem recedant. Quod sic demum praestantes tandem re ipsa cumulatissime agnoscent, quantum hoc tuum in se collatum beneficium profuerit ; maxime quo accedente didicerint ^b suam rempublicam saluam, incolumem, triumphantem seruare ; proinde tantum tibi suo praesentissimo seruatori debiturae, quantum is haud iniuria promeretur, qui non tantum aliquem e republica ciuem, | sed uel ipsam totam rempublicam ¹⁶⁵ seruauit.

^a om. B.

^b d dicerint, A ; id dicerint, B.

¹ This is a reiteration of what More had said about the Carthaginians and others, above, p. 49.

Meanwhile farewell. Go on and prosper, ever devising, carrying out and perfecting something, the bestowal of which on your country may give it long continuance and yourself immortality. Farewell, learned and courteous More, glory of your island, and ornament of this world of ours.

From my house at Mechlin ¹, 1516.

Interea uale, ac feliciter perge nonnihil usque meditari, agere, elaborare, quod in rempublicam collatum illi perpetuitatem, tibi immortalitatem addat. Vale, doctissime et idem humanissime More, tuae Britanniae ac nostri huius orbis decus.

Ex aedibus nostris Mechliniae. M.D.XVI.

¹ The splendour of Busleyden's house at Mechlin seems to have impressed More. See his epigrams upon it, and on the collections of coins, and the like, to be found there (Epigram- mata, ed. 1638, pp. 131, 133). In his letter to Erasmus, written shortly after his return from Flanders, he dwells on the same subject.

¶ Gerarde Nouiomage ¹ of Utopia.

Doth pleasure please? then place the here, and well
the rest,
Most pleasaunt pleasures thou shalte finde here.
Doeth profit ease? then here arriue, this yle is best.
For passinge profettes do here appeare.

GERARDVS NOVIOMAGVS DE VTOPIA.

Dulcia lector amas? sunt hic dulcissima quaeque.
Vtile si quaeris, nil legis utilius.

¹ Gerhard Geldenhaur, commonly called, from the place of his birth, Gerardus Noviomagus, was a native of Nimeguen in Guelderland. His father bore the same name. He studied at Deventer, and afterwards at Louvain, where he made such proficiency in philosophy that he became a teacher of that subject in the University. After passing some time at Antwerp, probably a few years before More's visit, he was called to the service of Charles of Austria as Court Chaplain. He then became secretary to Philip of Burgundy, Bishop of Utrecht (Horawitz, Erasmus von Rotterdam und Martinus Lipsius, 1882, p. 112). After a while he was sent, in 1526, to visit the schools of Wittenberg. What he there saw, strengthening, no doubt, some previous inclination that way, made him embrace the reformed faith. He removed to Worms, where, like Luther, he laid aside the cowl, and married. After teaching at Augsburg and Marburg, he died, Jan. 10, 1542, at the age of sixty. His change of religion lost him the friendship of Erasmus, who wrote bitterly of him in his letter In Pseudevangelicis. See Melchior Adam, Vitae Germ. Theologorum, 1653, p. 92; Bayle, Dict. ii. p. 1394; and the Grosses vollständiges Lexikon, 1735, s. v. I have been the more particular about this person, because of an opinion (see Dr. Lumby's Utopia, 2nd ed. p. 237 bis) that this Gerardus was no other than the Gerardus Listrius, who wrote the commentary on Erasmus's Moriae Encomium. As if to preclude the possibility of such a notion, the lives of the two are found side by side in Gesner's Bibliotheca, 1545, leaf 274.

Doeth bothe thee tempte, and woldest thou gripe both gaine and pleasure?

This yle is fraught with both bounteously.

To still thy gredie intent, reape here incomparable treasure

Bothe minde and tongue to garnishe richelie.

The hid welles and fountaines both of vice and vertue

Thou hast them here subiect vnto thine eye.

Be thankful now, and thankes where thankes be due

Geue to Thomas More Londons immortal glorye.

Siue utrunque uoles, utroque haec insula abundat,

Quo linguam ornes^a, quo doceas animum.

Hic fontes aperit recti prauique disertus

Morus, Londini gloria prima sui.

^a exornes, B., recte.

¶ Cornelius Graphey¹ to the Reader.

Vilt thou knowe what wonders straunge be in the lande² that late was founde?

Wilt thou learne thy life to leade, by diuers wayes that godly be?

Wilt thou of vertue and of vice vnderstande the very grounde?

Wilt thou see this wretched world, how ful it is of vanitie?

Then read, and marke, and beare in mind, for thy be-houfe, as thou maie best

All thinges that in this present worke, that worthie clerke sir Thomas More,

With witte diuine ful learnedly, vnto the worlde hath plaine exprest,

In whom London well glory maye, for wisdome and for godly lore.

CORNELIUS GRAPHEVS AD LECTOREM.

Vis noua monstra, nouo dudum nunc orbe reperto?

Viuendi uaria uis ratione modos?

Vis qui uirtutum fontes, uis unde malorum

Principia? et quantum rebus inane latet?

Haec lege, quae uario Morus dedit ille colore,

Morus Londinae nobilitatis honos.

BASILEAE APVD IOANNEM FROBE

NIVM MENSE MARTIO³.

AN. M. D. XVIII.

¹ A full account of Cornelius Grapheus (Schreiber) of Alst is given in the Appendix to vol. I. of Ullmann's Reformers before the Reformation, tr. by Menzies, 1855, pp. 397-416. Grapheus died Dec. 19, 1558, having survived his friend Erasmus twenty-two years. In 1521 he came under the grasp of a severe penal law enacted against heresy in the Netherlands by Charles V, and after being imprisoned in Brussels for a considerable time, he recanted and was released, March 25, 1522. Erasmus always retained a kindly feeling for him, and left him a legacy in his will.

² The immediate reference is to Utopia; but probably in the Latin, nouo orbe, there is a suggestion of the wider range of discoveries in the New World.

³ For the date, see the Introd. p. lxx.

GLOSSARY

[The authorities chiefly relied on have been The New English Dictionary, now in progress; Stratmann's Middle-English Dictionary, ed. by Bradley; and Professor Skeat's Etymological Dictionary.]

A.

A (prep.), a worn form of 'on,' as in 'set a worke.' Comp. 'on liue' (p. 255)=alive.

A brode, abroad.

A goddes name, in God's name.

A pece, each. Comp. St. John ii. 6: 'two or three firkins apiece.'

Addict, devoted or inclined to.

Aduenture (at all), at all hazards, at any rate.

Aduisement, thought, consideration. Fr. avis. For the d inserted, comp. 'advantage.'

Aduoutrye, adultery. Old Fr. avoutrie, Lat. adulterium.

Aduoyded, avoided. For the inserted d see 'aduisement.'

Aferd, afraid. So used in the Homilies of 1563.

Affection. See p. 237 n.

Aglettes, aglets. Fr. aiguillettes, tags of laces, pendants.

Allebencheis, ale-benches, seats in front of public-houses.

Alliaunce, alliance, used collectively (p. 257) for connexions.

Allyaunte to, akin to.

Alon, alone.

A lowe, to, to allow, approve. Old Fr. alouer, Lat. allaudare.

Ambre, amber. If 'or' be not a misprint for 'of' (p. 133), the word must be used for 'oil of amber.'

Amplifycatyons, extensions or enlargements (logical term, p. 185).

An, and.

Ancientest, most ancient, oldest. Fr. ancien, Lat. antianum. For the added t, comp. 'peasant,' 'tyrant.'

Angerlye, angrily. So used in Shaksp., Two Gentlemen of Verona, i. 2. 62.

Appayred, impaired. So used in the Paston Letters.

Appoynte, to, to arrange, prepare. Old Fr. apointer, Lat. appunctare.

Archedoltes, arch dolts, great dullards.

Arrive, to, to come.

Assault, to, to assail (with reasoning). 'To assault him with a

- newer declaration' is quoted from Clarendon in the New Engl. Dict.
- Assone, as soon.
- Auale, to, to lower, or debase (pp. 240, 274) Old Fr. avalier 'to descend,' now 'to swallow.' Lat. ad vallem (of rivers flowing down to the valley).
- Auaunce, to, to advance, move forward. For the d, comp. 'aduisement.'
- Auauncement, furtherance, promotion. Comp. the title of Bacon's treatise: The Aduancement of Learning.
- Auaylable, serviceable, efficacious.
- Auctor, author, adviser.
- Auenture, adventure, chance. 'At al auentures' (p. 274), all by chance.
- Auncetours, ancestors. Old Fr. ancestres, Lat. antecessores; with the Latin termination retained.
- Auncient. See p. 271 n.
- Auncyetnes, ancientness, antiquity; also priority. In the New Engl. Dict. Coke On Littleton is quoted: 'And then all other Bishops of both Provinces after their ancientnesse.'
- Aunters, in, in adventure (comp. 'peradventure'), in case that. Stratmann quotes Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle, ed. 1810, p. 65: 'to do his lif an auntre' (in adventure).
- A veyleable, available. See Auaylable.
- Ayere, air. So spelt by Hawes, 1509.
- B.
- Bandes, bonds.
- Basse, low, base. Fr. bas, basse.
- Battayle, used sometimes for the
- army in battle array, as in 1 Sam. xvii. 21.
- Be, by; still common as a provincialism.
- Behated, held in hatred. Comp. 'beloved.'
- Behoufe, behoof, advantage.
- Bende, band (of men), akin to bind.
- Bestowe, to, to place, dispose of. So used in St. Luke xii. 17.
- Bocher, butcher. Fr. boucher, properly one who kills buck goats.
- Bolles, bowls.
- Borderours, borderers, those living on the confines of a country.
- Botys, boats.
- Brabling, wrangling: the 'pribbles and prabbles' of Sir Hugh Evans.
- Bredeth, breadth.
- Bronte, brunt.
- Bryde, Bryed, to, to breed.
- Busily, eagerly, importunately. The New Engl. Dict. quotes the Towneley Myst. 26: 'Pray for me besele.'
- By and by, immediately. So in St. Luke xxi. 9.
- Bycause that, in order that. Still often so used by uneducated people. The New Engl. Dict. quotes Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, ed. 1651, i. p. 525: 'Anointing the doors and hinges with oyl, because they should not creak.'
- By like, belike ('by what is like'), probably.
- Bye, to, to buy.
- Bygnes, bigness, magnitude.
- C.
- Cannellis, channels, canals.
- Carfully, in a way full of care, anxiously.

- Carke, to, to be anxious. Stratmann quotes 'carke and care' from The Sgyr of Lowe Degre.
- Cauillation, cavil, used to render calumnia (p. 239). Fr. cavillation, a quibble.
- Cautell, caution, proviso. Lat. cautela.
- Chaffayre, to, to chaffer, buy and sell: a contraction of cheapfare.
- Charges, expense: the plural form used as a singular.
- Cheualrye, chivalry, used co-extensively with res militaris.
- Cheuse, to, to choose. More uses both 'chese' and 'chuse' in his English Works.
- Children. See p. 235 n.
- Circumstaunce, surroundings; used (p. 235) for all that wraps up and obscures the truth.
- Circumuertions, a word formed like 'perversions,' to express distortions of the truth (p. 235).
- Cleped, called. 'Clepe' is used by Shakspeare.
- Cleyme, to, to claim. 'Cleimed them quit of ther servise' is quoted by Stratmann from Manning's Hist. of England.
- Coliars, colliers.
- Coloure, colour, as in 'colour of reason'; appearance or pretence.
- Commen, to, to come.
- Commen, to, to commune.
- Commoditye, convenience.
- Conceyt, opinion.
- Conductyon, leading.
- Condytyons, terms.
- Conningly, cunningly, skilfully. Comp. the 'cunning work' of Exod. xxxi. 4.
- Conueiaunce, conveyance, cunning management. The New Engl. Dict. quotes from Sir Thomas Elyot: 'If they be taken with any crafty conueiaunce.'
- Conuersation, way of living, as in 2 Pet. iii. 11.
- Coorpe, corpse. Lat. corpus. The form corp is quoted from Middleton.
- Corragiously, with a good heart. See Couraghe.
- Couch, to, to lie. Fr. se coucher.
- Couett, to, to covet.
- Coueyne, Couyne, covin, fraudulent action. Late Lat. conuenium. The word occurs in Fabyan's Chronicle.
- Couraghe, courage, in its original sense of 'heart.' Low Lat. coraticum. So used in Chaucer's Prologue.
- Cowardyshe, cowardly. .
- Coytes, quoits.
- Cracke, to, to talk big, or vaunt. 'And Ethiops of their sweet complexion crack.'—Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3.
- Crafte, skill, as in 'handicraft.' 'Onely the crafte' (p. 253) = the only means.
- Credence, credit. The New Engl. Dict. quotes from Strype: 'meat and drink . . had and obtained upon their credence.'
- Cunnynge, (sub.) knowledge; (adj.) knowing, skilful.
- Cure, care: still used in 'cure of souls.'
- Customablye, as a matter of custom, usually.
- Cyuytle, civil.

D.

- Dasell, to, to dazzle, frequentative of to daze, or dase, to stupefy.
- Daunger, danger. Originally in the sense of dominion or power.

Fr. danger; late Lat. domin-arium. See the note on p. 182.

Delycte, delight. The old spelling is nearer the Lat. delectare.

Deudyngge, dividing.

Deuyne, divine (adj.).

Deuyse, device.

Dew, due. Old Fr. deut.

Deynty, dainty, exquisite. Old Fr. daintié (sub.), Lat. dignitatem.

Disbourdened, unburdened.

Discriue, to, to describe. Common in the form 'describe.'

Diserdes, clowns, fools. A 'disar,' according to Halliwell, was an actor in a play, especially the clown; and hence a fool in general.

Dishonestie, dishonour, disgrace.

Displeasaunt, displeasing, offensive.

Dissidente (from), different from, at variance with.

Dissolate, dissolute. The a is probably a misprint.

Dissolue, to, to solve, settle (a doubt, or question).

Distances, intervals (in music), p. 209.

Domme, dumb. The form 'dom' is found in Rolle's Pricke of Conscience.

Dorres, drones. A 'dor' was a drone beetle, as in Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels, iii. 3 (quoted by Wright): 'What should I care what every dor doth buzz | In credulous ears?'

Dote, to, to be foolish. Comp. 'dotage.'

Dreuell, a drudge, bond-servant (Stratmann). According to Skeat, from 'drab,' a slut. Used as a word of contempt (p. 182) to translate nebulò.

Drydyngge, dreading.

Dytty, song or poem. Old Fr. dité or dicté, Lat. dictatum. Comp. Ps. xlv. 1: 'My heart is inditing a good matter.'

E.

Easere, easier.

Edition, putting forth, publishing. The New Engl. Dict. quotes Bullinger's Decades (1592), III: 'Touching the proclamation or first edition of the ten Commandements.'

Eftsones, soon, presently; lit. 'soon after,' 'eft' being 'afterwards' in Gower and other early writers.

Egal, equal. Fr. égal. Chaucer uses 'egall.'

Elles, else.

Eloquence, not only 'eloquent language' (in the concrete), but the art of using such language.

Embrayding, upbraiding, bringing as a reproach against. According to Skeat, the simple verb, besides its meaning of 'to weave,' also signified to fasten on, or attack.

Emonge, among. Used in this form by Sir Thomas Malory.

Endaunger, to, to subject to control, bring under one's power or influence. See Daunger.

Endeaouere, to, used transitively. For the reflexive use, see p. 249 n.

Endeuoire, endeavour. Fr. en devoir, as in 'se mettre en devoir de faire quelque chose.'

Enfamed. See Infamed.

Ensure, to, to assure.

Enterteynement, occupation, way of spending (time). Shaks., Love's Labour's Lost, v. 1. 126:

- 'as concerning some entertainment of time.'
- Equynoctyall, equinoctial. 'The line equynoctyall,' the equator.
- Eschue, eschew. 1 Pet. iii. 11: 'Let him eschew evil and do good.' Fr. essuyer, Lat. exsuccare.
- Espiall, a spy.
- Euel, evil, ill.
- Existymatyon, estimation.
- Exploited, managed, worked (esp. of land). Fr. exploiter, Lat. explicitare* (explicare); lit. to develop.
- Expresslye, openly, aloud.
- F.
- False, wrong (p. 214), as in a 'false note.'
- Falshed, falsehood. The Anglo-Saxon hād denoted state or quality.
- Fanglenes, used in the phrase 'newe fanglenes' (p. 57). We still use 'newfangled.' The root of 'fangle' is the same as of 'fang,' so that the word means 'readiness to catch at (news).'
- Fantasy, to, to fancy, imagine. The form 'phantasie' is used by Foxe.
- Fardell, a package. Fr. fardeau, said to be of Arabic origin.
- Farfurth, far forth; used in the phrase 'in so far forth as,' in so far as.
- Fassyon, fashion. Fr. façon, Lat. factionem.
- Fauour, look, countenance, as in 'well-favoured.' So used by Shakspeare.
- Fawt, fault.
- Fealnige (p. 224), a misprint in the original for 'fealinge.'
- Feare, to, to frighten, deter. Hence 'afearred,' afraid.
- Feat, anything done. Fr. fait, Lat. factum. 'Feat of armes' (p. 243), used to translate disciplina militaris, 'military training.'
- Ferefull, formidable. See to Feare.
- Ferfurth. See Farfurth.
- Fermes, farms. Fr. fermes, lit. 'agreements' (Lat. firma).
- Filde, field.
- Flowringe, flowering, in its prime.
- Flowtynge, flouting, mocking. Acc. to Skeat, the root is the same as that of 'to flute,' Du. fluyten. The word occurs (p. 10) in the phrase 'lowtynge and flowtynge,' used to render the Lat. capellicio uellicantes, an unusual expression, apparently meant for 'plucking by the hair.'
- Fond, foolish, as in 'When men were fond, I smiled.'—Measure for Measure, ii. 2.
- Forby. See p. 128 n.
- Forestalle, to, to buy up beforehand; joined with 'ingrossing' (p. 57). See Jacob's Law Dictionary for the nature of the offence implied in each term.
- Forsothe, forsooth, in truth.
- Fownde, found.
- Foynes, foins, thrusts with the point of a sword or other weapon.
- Fraight, freighted.
- Fraye, to, to frighten, deter. Hence 'afraid.'
- Frinde, friend.
- Furth with, forthwith.
- Fyerslye, fiercely.
- Fyne, fine; used (p. 42) of speech, refined, polished.
- Fynesse, fineness.

G.

- Gage, pledge. Fr. gage.
- Gallowwnte, fine, gay. Fr. galant, originally partic. of galer, to rejoice.
- Gallows, gibbet. 'Gallows wretche,' Lat. furcifer, one who deserves hanging.
- Gallymalfreye, used (p. 99) to express an incongruous medley. For its use to denote a dish of various meats mixed together, Halliwell quotes Cotgrave s. v. Hachis, and Lilly's Six Court Comedies, 1632, sig. T. The French Schoolmaster, 1636, gives 'a gallimaufrey, une fricassée.'
- Garnishing, furnishing.
- Gawl, gall. As used at p. 75, the word has no reference to gall in the sense of bile, but is the Old Fr. galle, Lat. callus, in the sense of a sore place.
- Geanyng, gaining.
- Geaste wyse, guestwise, as a guest, or visitor.
- Geere, gear, business in hand. At p. 294 for 'stuff' or 'things.'
- Geme, gem.
- Gently men, gentlemen.
- Gieste, to, to jest. The g recalls the Lat. gesta.
- Giues, gyves.
- Gorgious, gorgeous, with the notion of a certain pompousness. Lit. 'swelling out the throat' (Fr. gorge).
- Gramercye, originally grand merci, 'many thanks.' Then used for the obtaining anything for mere thanks, gratuitously. Shakspeare uses it in the former sense.
- Greiffe, grief, in the sense of trouble; lit. 'burden' (Lat. gravis).

- Greuously, grievously, with pain or reluctance.
- Gripe, to, to grip, or seize.
- Grislye, grisly, dreadful.
- Grosse, strictly 'big' (Fr. gros), then plain, probable.
- Ground, to (used intransitively, p. 282), to rest as on a basis.
- Groundes, lands.
- Guyse, guise.
- Gyaunte, giant.
- Gyell, Gyle, guile.
- Gyues. See Giues.

H.

- Hable, able. Fr. habile, Lat. habilis.
- Handsome, handy, manageable. Skeat cites the Dutch handzaam, 'tractable.'
- Hapt, wrapt. 'Happing' is used in the York Mysteries for wrapping.
- Harboroughe, harbour, shelter. Fr. auberge, anciently herberge. The word is used by Chaucer.
- Hard, heard.
- Harmesse, unharmed.
- Haylsede. See p. 29 n.
- Heard man, herdsman.
- Heare, hair; spelt heer in the Prompt. Parvulorum.
- Hether, hither.
- Heuely, heavily.
- Heuynes, heaviness.
- Hole, whole.
- Hollye, holy.
- Holsom, wholesome, salutary.
- Holy, Holye, wholly.
- Honeste, honourable. Lat. honestus.
- Howke, hook. Used (p. 53) in the phrase 'by howke or crooke,' 'by hook or by crook,' by one means or another.

Hurley-Burley, tumult. So used by Shaksp., Macbeth, i. 1. Shakspere also uses the simple word hurly in the same sense (Comp. Fr. hurler, to howl): 'Amid this hurly.'—Taming of the Shrew, iv. 1. The 'burly' is merely a reduplication.

Hydeous, hideous, frightful. Fr. hideux, from Lat. hispidosus, shaggy. Hence the word has passed through stages of meaning similar to 'horrid.'

Hyere, to, to hire.

I.

Iauell, a vagabond, worthless person. Halliwell quotes from Lansdowne MSS., no. 1033 (in an account of Sir Thomas More's execution): 'shall I count him a javel, who is to doe me so great a benefit?' Avoines javelées are oats spoilt by the rain, from lying on the ground.

Jeopardye, jeopardy. Old Fr. jeu parti, a game in which the hazard was equally divided.

Iette, to, to strut. Lat. iactare (comp. 'jetty'). Wright quotes from Rowlands, Knave of Hearts, 1613: 'Along the streetes as he doth jetting passe | His outside shoves him for an inward asse.'

Ight, eighth.

Imbrayde, to. See Embrayding.

Impery. See p. 112 n.

Incomprehensible (p. 267), not to be confined within boundaries. Compare its use in the Athanasian Creed.

Incontinent, immediately. 'He says he will return incontinent.'—Othello, iv. 3.

Indyfferent, impartial. Comp. 'judge indifferent' in Hen. VIII, ii. 4.

Inestymable, too great to be measured.

Infamed, made infamous, degraded.

Informatyons, instructions. Comp. the use of Lat. informator.

Ingrosse, to. See Forestall.

Institute, trained.

Instructe (past partic., like the preceding).

Intentyons. See p. 185 n.

Interest, concern or share in. Comp. the use of the Lat. interesse.

Intreatauce, entreaty.

Intreate, to, to treat of.

Intyerlye, entirely.

Inuehing, inveighing. Lat. invehere (the g being an intrusion).

Inured, trained.

Ionckettes, sweetmeats, originally served upon rushes (Lat. iuncus): hence the name.

Iugers, judges, adjudicators.

Iust, equal.

K.

Kendle, to, to kindle. The old spelling is nearer to candle, which is given as the origin of the word.

Kinrede, kindred. The d in the modern form is an intrusion. Comp. 'hated.'

Kipe, to, to keep.

Knowledge, to, to acknowledge. Wright quotes from Gascoigne: 'Mine owne deere nimphes, which knowledge me your queene.'

Kyeles, keels. Skeat compares the Dutch Kiel.

L.

- Lauasse, lavish.
Laundes. See p. 52 n. Perhaps used there as the Fr. landes, waste lands.
Leage, league.
Lease, Leaste, lest.
Leese, Leise, Lese, to, to lose. Comp. Germ. verlieren.
Leffe, life.
Let, to, to hinder.
Letell, little.
Lette, to. See Let.
Lette (sub.), a hindrance.
Lewde, base, ignorant. Comp. Acts xvii. 5: 'Certain lewd fellows of the baser sort.'
Lieuetenaunte, lieutenant.
Liqueresse, liquorice; a corrupted form of Pliny's glycyrrhiza, 'sweet root.'
Liue (sub.), life.
Liue, to, to live.
Lores, teachings, systems. Used (p. 211) with 'ordinaunces' to render instituta.
Lothsumnes, loathsomeness, irksomeness.
Lowtynge, bowing (in mockery). See Flowtynge. Stratmann quotes from Robert of Gloucester: 'his hed loutede a doun'; and 'louting' for 'inclination.'
Lubbor, lubber, dolt.
Lumpyshe, stupid.
Lust, to, to desire.
Lycensed, left free.

M.

- Madder, a plant from which a red dye is made.
Make, 'to make to' (p. 205), to contribute to.
Manfully, twice used (pp. 46, 247)

- to translate strennue (strenue), 'resolutely,' 'courageously.'
Mansleers, manslayers, homicides.
Margent, margin. For the t comp. 'peasant,' 'tyrant.'
Marrish, marsh, marsh.
Meane, moderate, ordinary.
Meate, meet.
Meese, a mess, a set (of four) at table (p. 164). Orig. a portion of food. Comp. Fr. mets.
Meruelyng, marvelling. Comp. Fr. merveille.
Mery, merry, cheerful. The word could formerly be applied to the weather, or to clean and cheerful towns, conveying the notion of quieter gladness than now. Hence even 'Glad homage pay with awful mirth,' in the New Version of the Hundredth Psalm.
Methe, mead. See p. 124 n.
Mo, Moo, more. 'Ne mo ne les' is found in the Ayenbite of Inwyt. 'More' is sometimes thought to be a comparative of 'mo'; but, as Professor Skeat shows, wrongly.
Modestie, moderation.
Mone, moon.
Moneth, month.
Mormosett, a marmoset, a monkey. Acc. to Littré, the word is from marmoretum*, a little marble figure, such as the grotesque ones seen on fountains.
Morreyn, murrain.
Mortall, deadly, as in 'a mortal wound.'
Moughteaten, motheaten.
Moyle. See p. 86 n.
Musynge, meditating.
Myddes, the middle. Comp. 'mid-ship,' 'mid-ocean.'
Myenes, mines.

Myke, meek.

Myte, mite.

N.

Namelye (p. 143), by name, specially.

Natiue, innate.

Neeke (to lay in the, set in the).

See p. 103 n.

Nemblens, nimbleness. The e appears in the German nehmen, which is akin to it.

Next, nighest, nearest.

Nigeshe, niggardly, stingy. The adj. nig is quoted from old writers by Stratmann. Hence 'niggard' (with French termination).

Nother, neither. The spelling with o preserves the true form of the negative.

Noughtenes, naughtiness, as in St. James i. 21: 'all superfluity of naughtiness.'

Nourceis, nurses. Fr. nourrices, Lat. nutrices.

Noyinge, injuring. We retain the compound, 'annoy.' The simple verb to 'noy' is quoted by Halliwell from North and Becon.

Noyous, hurtful, injurious. See the preceding.

Noysome, noisome, troublesome.

Nyce, nice, fastidious. Old Fr. nice, Lat. nescius; orig. ignorant, then indolent.

Nye, nigh.

Nyggyshe. See Nigeshe.

O.

Observation, respect, Lat. observatio.

Occupy, to, to do business. Ezek. xxvii. 9: 'to occupy thy merchandise.' Lit. 'to take hold of,' Lat. occupare.

Oneles, unless.

Opteyne, to, to obtain.

Orels, or else.

Other, either. See Nother.

Ouerseen. See p. 138 n.

Ouerthwarte, cross, contradictory.

We retain the compound 'athwart,' and the sub. 'thwarts,' cross-pieces.

P.

Parasite, a sycophant. Lit. 'one who dines beside another at his table'; hence a hanger-on.

Parcell, part. Comp. our phrase 'part and parcel of.' The form is a diminutive.

Parloure, a room in a house. Fr. parloir, lit. 'a room to talk in.' Comp. 'boudoir.'

Parsons, persons.

Paseis, paces.

Pass for, to (also to pass alone), to care, to have regard for. 'These silken-coated slaves I pass not.' —2 Hen. VI, iv. 2.

Patient, to (used reflexively, 'to patient oneself'), to compose, calm. Comp. the Fr. patienter.

Peerles, pearls.

Pennyfathers, misers, penurious persons. Wright quotes from Harrington: 'Cosmus has ever been a penny-father.'

Pensifenes, (anxious) thought, solicitude. Fr. pensif.

Fensille, pencil, orig. a small brush for painting. Fr. pinceau.

Perfet, perfect.

Performed, completed. The word has nothing to do with form, but is from the same root as Fr. four-nir.

Persecute, Persequete, to, to follow up.

Perseuer, to, to persevere.

Phisick (books), medical works.

Phrensie, frenzy, madness. Fr. frénésie.

Pike (a thank), to, to be a pickthank, a flatterer. Wright quotes from Fairfax: 'A flatterer, a pickthank, and a lyer.'

Plat, plot (of ground). 2 Kings ix. 26.

Platte fourme, platform, in its literal sense of 'ground plan.'

Plotte. See Plat.

Pluck away, to, to seize and take away, to remove. Comp. 'pluck up one's courage.'

Plucke backe, to. See the preceding. Used of setting back one who had been promoted.

Policie, device.

Polle, to, to shave (the head), hence to plunder.

Pour, power.

Praye, prey.

Preese, press.

Prescrypt, prescribed.

Presentlye, in one's presence; at the present time.

Pretended, Pretensed, intended, designed.

Preuented, anticipated, forestalled.

Preuy, Preuelye, privy, privily.

Pristynate, original, ancient.

Procure, to, to take means for, to manage.

Proffe, proof.

Propriety, property.

Prouoke, to, to challenge, invite.

Prouost, provost, the head of a college, and the like. Lat. prae-positus. For the office of provost see The Inmates of Beverley Minster, by Arthur Leach, F.S.A., p. II.

Pryestes, priests.

Puisaunce, power. Fr. puissance.

Pulleyne, poultry. Comp. 'pullet' and Fr. poule. Wright quotes Beaumont and Fletcher's Scornful Lady, v. 2: 'She . . . knows how pulien should be cramm'd.'

Puppettes, dolls. Fr. poupées.

Pusaunce. See Puisaunce.

Pylled, plundered. For to pill, sometimes confused with peel, comp. Fr. pillier.

Q.

Quayled, quelled. 'Quell' and 'quail' are related to each other as active (or causal) and passive.

Quicke, living.

Quod, quoth, saith. One of More's Dialogues was popularly known as Quod he and Quod I, from the frequent recurrence in it of those two sentences. See Bridgett's Life, p. 283.

Quyte, quit, discharged.

Qweynes, queans, immodest women. Not necessarily in a bad sense by derivation, being the same word as 'queens.'

R.

Rampiere, to, to fortify. The forms 'rampire' and 'ramper' are closely akin to Fr. remparer (Lat. re-em-parare). Hence the modern 'rampart.'

Rauin, to, to devour, plunder. Comp. Gen. xlix. 27: 'Benjamin shall ravin as a wolf.'

Rauyne, rapine. See the preceding.

Recule, to, to recoil, give ground. Fr. reculer.

Reherse, to, to repeat, declare. Said to mean originally to drag the 'herse' (harrow) again over the same ground.

Rehersynge, repeating. Used (p. 59) to translate the I.at. repetunt.

Reken, to, to reckon.

Renowme, renown. The old spelling is more agreeable to the derivation. Fr. renom.

Repriued, reprieved.

Retaynoure, retainer.

Reuerende, used (p. 110) as a noun, 'reverence,' if the spelling be correct.

Rewle, rule.

Rides. See p. 219 n.

Rounding, used (p. 74) for the mode of cropping the hair of bondmen, 'rownded a lytle aboute the ceres' (p. 68).

Rowme, room, position. St. Luke xiv. 8.

Rubbers, robbers.

Russhe-bucklers. See p. 146 n.

Ryffe, rife.

S.

Sad, serious. Lit. sated; and so heavy, oppressive.

Saffe, safe.

Saintuaries, sanctuaries.

Sauffe. See Saffe. Fr. sauf.

Scasely, scarcely. The r is wanting also in the cognate Spanish escaso.

Sciences, used (p. 140) in the sense of arts.

Sclaunderer, slanderer. Fr. escandredre, a scandal; Lat. scandalum. The l is an interpolation.

Scoupe, scope. Joined (p. 63) with 'license.' The original idea of 'mark to aim at' passes into that of space (as in 'scope-law,' a distance allowed to one running a race), and so into that of liberty.

Seal, to, to assure by written contract.

Seilie, Sely, Seely, silly, simple, innocent. Germ. selig, 'blessed'; with which compare the history of the Fr. benêt and the Greek euêthes.

Seke (to be to), to be wanting in, to be at a loss.

Selſe (in common use not joined to its pronoun, as 'it selſe.' Sometimes used as a noun, as 'the owne selſe').

Sene (to be well), in anything, is to be well prepared, skilful in it. Comp. Taming of the Shrew, i. 2: 'A schoolmaster | well seen in music.'

Separrtion, separation.

Sethe, to, to boil.

Seuerall, separate. Lat. separatus. For the change of pa to v comp. Sèvre (the river), from Separis.

Sewere, sure.

Shamefastnes, a sense of what is becoming (p. 177), used to translate Lat. pudor. 'Shamefacedness' is a modern corruption. Trench compares 'rootfast,' 'rockfast,' &c.

Sheathes (p. 179), apparently in the sense of 'outsides,' 'cases.' Comp. Daniel vii. 15, where 'body' is an equivalent for 'sheath.'

Sheffe, sheaf.

Shilter, shelter. The i preserves the connexion with 'shield.'

Shrewedlye, cursedly, maliciously, and so roughly. Hen. VIII, v. 2: 'Do my lord of Canterbury a shrewd turn, and he is your friend for ever.'

Shyere, shire.

- Sickerly, surely. Germ. sicherlich.
Sike, to, to seek.
Siriens, Syrians.
Skante, scarcely.
Skape, to, to escape.
Skarsenes, scarcity.
Skaselic. See Scasely.
Skeant. See Skante.
Skyrnyshe, skirmish.
Sleane, slain.
Sloughishnes, sluggishness.
Slowth, sloth, slowness.
Smacke, a taste.
Smugge, neat, trim, used disparagingly, p. 11, in the same collocation as by Davies, Scourge of Folly (1611): 'And makes the same to look most smooth and smugge.' Comp. the German schmuck.
Socour, to, to succour.
Sodde, sodden. See to Sethe.
Sodeyne, sudden.
Softely, gently, quietly. Wright quotes from Palsgrave: 'Soft, softe, the chylde is aslepe.'
Solas, solace.
Solempne, solemn, customary. The form is found in Chaucer.
Sollicitour, suitor.
Som, Some, sum.
Soone, sun.
Sorte (a good), a good number or quantity. 'We were set upon | By a sort of country fellows.'—Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, ii. 2.
Speces, spices. Lat. species.
Spill, to, to spoil, ruin. Halliwell quotes from MS. Cantab. ff. ii. 38: 'Allas! sche seyde, now am y spylte.'
States, men of high rank, like Estates. St. Mark vi. 21: 'Herod made a supper to his chief estates.'
- Stiele, to, to steal.
Stomackes, tempers, inclinations. Hen. V., iv. 3: 'Which have no stomach to this fight.'
Stonde, to, to stand.
Stonyshe, stony, hard.
Storries, storeys.
Straung, strange.
Streken, stricken.
Stroke (to bear the). See p. 104 n.
Stuffe, matter. The Tempest, ii. 1: 'What stuff is this? How say you?'
Sturre, to, to stir.
Synte, to, to stint.
Subiect, placed under. Lat. subiectus.
Subleuation, elevation. Applied (p. xcix) to the latitude of a place measured from the equator.
Suete, suit.
Sueters, suitors.
Surmount, to, to mount up, to swell.
Swing (to bear the), to have the chief influence. Halliwell quotes from Hall: 'Whiche in those quarters bare great swynge.' Comp. also the expression 'to give full swing to'; and the note on 'bearing the stroke,' p. 104.
Sylie. See Sellie.
- T.
- Thadmynstratyon, the administration. The definite article is often blended thus with nouns beginning with vowels.
The (sometimes), thee.
The (p. 221), they.
Then, than.
There selves, themselves. See Self.
Throng, crowded.
Thoroughly, thoroughly.

Tiole (p. 282), a misprint for toil.
To, too.
Toolynge, toiling.
Torues, turves, pl. of turf.
Trade, habit or custom. Lit. 'a beaten path,' from 'tread.' Skeat compares 'trade-wind,' a wind that blows habitually in one direction.
Traditions, rules delivered, or handed down.
Traine, Trayne, contrivance. Halliwell quotes from MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38: 'Have slayne Syr Roger be some trayne.'
Trauayle, travail, labour.
Trime, to, to trim.
Trippe, trip, a fault.
Troughewyse, troughwise, like a trough.
Tuition, keeping, guardianship. Comp. Fr. tuteur.

V.

Valiaunt, strong. Fr. vaillant.
Vewere, viewer, contemplator.
Vielnes, vileness, worthlessness.
Vmpier, umpire, arbiter.
Vnconuenient, inconvenient, unfitting. Comp. Eph. v. 4: 'Nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient.'
Vndoynge, undoing, destruction.
Vnhonest, dishonourable.
Vnpleasaunt, displeasing, disagreeable.
Vnquiete, to, to disquiet, to disturb.
Vnthyfty (p. 149), a misprint in the original for 'vnthryfty.'
Vntyed, untied, set free.
Vnweldye, unwieldy, awkward, unmanageable. Used of impotent persons, and of armour.
Vplandishe, rustic, countryfied.

Wright quotes from Tales and Quicke Answers: 'an uplandissh man nourysshed in the woodes.'
Vpryght, right. Comp. 'uprightness,' in the sense of 'rectitude.'
Vred, used. We retain the compound 'inured.' 'Ure' is not from the same root as 'use,' but is akin to the French œuvre, Lat. opera, as in manœuvre.
Vtter, to, to publish. We speak of 'uttering counterfeit coin.'

W.

Wageyn, waggon, or wain.
Wantonly, unrestrainedly.
Ware, merchandise; then, like 'gear,' of other matters.
Wayde, weighed.
Waynge, weighing.
Weale publyque, commonwealth.
Wealthely, well.
Weldynge, wielding.
Well, will.
Well a worthe. See p. 227 n.
Weydes, weeds.
Whether, whither.
Whiles, at times.
Whomewyth, with whom. Comp. Lat. quibuscum.
Wieles, wiles.
Wipe beside, to. See p. 245 n.
Woll, wool.
Wonders, used adverbially, as in 'wonders gladde.'
Wonte, accustomed. Originally past ptc. of won 'to dwell' (Germ. wohnen), from which Chaucer uses woning.
Wordle, a variety, occurring several times (as at pp. 184, 306) for world. Stratmann gives the form 'wordle' from William de Shoreham, circ. 1315, and from various other early writers.

Wower, wooer.

Wrie, to, to twist, pervert. Comp.
'awry.'

Wrythen, twisted.

Wysefooles, an oxymoron, like morosophi, for persons wise in their own conceits.

Wyttelye, wisely.

Y.

Ydill, idle.

Yelde, to, to yield.

Yeopardye. See Jeopardye.

Yle, isle. The s is an intrusion

Ynowe, enough. Germ. genug.

Yocke, yoke.

INDEX

A.

Abraxa, old name of Utopia, xlili, 118; meaning of name, 118 n.
 Achoriens, the, 85.
 Act of Parliament, on enclosures, xxxvi.
 Adam, of St. Victor, hymn of, 76-7.
 Adamus (Ademus), new name of the 'Prince' in Utopia, 148.
 Adultery, 229, 231.
 Advertising, abuse of, lxiv.
 Aegidius, Petrus. See Giles, Peter.
 Agnadello, battle of, xxxii.
 Agriculture, carefully taught in Utopia, 139.
 Alaopolitanes, the, 244.
 Aldus, Manutius, books printed by, 216; death of, 218 n.
 Alphabet, the Utopian, xciv n.; facsimile of, facing p. xciv.
 Alsop, Bernard, lxxiv.
 Alternation, of town and country life, beneficial, lxii, 121.
 Amaurote, chief city of Utopia, xxx, xlv, xlv, 6, 119, 126, 177; origin of name, 126 n.; described, 127; council of, 169.
 Ambuscades, 260.
 Anaxagoras, saying of, 28 n.
 Anemolians, the, 177.
 Anemolius, poet laureate of Utopia, xciii.

Antwerp, description of, xxix; cathedral of, 25.
 Anyder, river of Amaurote, 6; meaning of name, 127 n.; described, 127.
 Aragon, king of, 83.
 Arber, Professor, x, lxiv n., lxxv, lxxvi n.
 Archbold, W. A. J., xxv n., 41 n.
 Archery, practice of, 262 n.
 Aristophanes, 216.
 Aristotle, 215.
 Armies, standing, evil of, 49.
 Arms, of the English soldiers, 262 n.
 Arnold, George, xviii n.
 Arthur, Prince of Wales, xxxiii.
 Asceticism, how far meritorious, 210.
 Ascham, Roger, 25 n., 27 n.
 Astrology, More's contempt for, 186.
 Augustine, St., the De Civitate Dei of, xx, xlix, 268 n., 293 n.; More lectures on it, xlvi, lxxxix n.; outline of the work, xlix; its theory of bondage, l.
 Augustus, story of, 177 n.

B.

Bacon, Sir Francis, liv; advises James I as to Sutton's endowment, lix; his New Atlantis, lx.
 Bainham, James, case of, 273 n.

- Bankers, 301 n.
 Barzanes, old name of the 'Prince' in Utopia, 148.
 Baumstark, R., his conception of the Utopia, xli n.; of Amaurote, 126 n.
 Beggary in England, xxxv, 43 n.; causes of, 54, 146; none in Utopia, 300.
Bellum, derivation of, 243.
 Bentley, Richard, xviii.
 Bilibaldicae (daughters of Willibald Pirckheimer), liv, lxiv.
 Birds, Plato on, 294 n.
 Bishop, the Utopian, 160.
 Blackheath, battle of, 40 n.
 Blanc, Louis, lxiii.
 Blunt, Rev. J. H., 283 n.
 Bondage, in Utopia, l, 161, 230.
 Bondmen, among the Utopians, li, 221; chains worn by, 176.
 Boys, training of, in manners, 163 n.
 Brabant, duchy of, coveted by France, 82.
 Brabrook, E. W., xvii n.
 Brest, battle of, 262 n.
 Brethren of the Common Life, 280 n.
 Brewer, J. S., xxvii n., and often.
 Bribery, 108, 109.
 Brittany, Royal house of, xxxiii, 45 n.
 Bruges, description of, xxix, 23.
 Brute beasts, souls of, 276.
 Budé, Guillaume, xl; letter of, lxxx; account of, ib. n.; his family profess the reformed faith, lxxx n.; his invectives against private property, ib.; his Greek, xci.
 Burghley, Lord. See Cecil, Sir W.
 Burgundy, duchy of, 82.
 Burial, and cremation, 277.
 Burnet, Gilbert, his translation of the Utopia, lxxv, 116 n., and often.
- Busleyden, Hierome, account of, xcv n.; letter of Peter Giles to, ib.; letter of, to More, 313; splendour of his house, 319 n.
 Butchers, in Utopia, only bondmen, 158, 200.
 Buthrescas, the, 282.
- C.
- Cabot, John, xx.
 Calyquit (Calicut), 29.
 Cambray, league of, xxxii; Cardinal of, 298 n.
 Campanella, Thomas, liv, lvi.
 Camps, fortification of, 261.
 Candles, in church, 294.
 Capel, Sir William, 95 n.
 Capital punishment, arguments against, 62.
 Carthaginians, the, 49, 318 n.
 Cassel, in France, 23 n.
 Castellum, More's, taken by Robynson as the name of a place, xxxix n., 28 n.
 Castile, kingdom of, 83.
 Cayly, Arthur, translator of the Utopia, lxxvi.
 Cecil, Sir William, Lord Burghley, liv n.; school-fellow of Ralph Robynson, lxxi, 19; account of, 15 n.
 Celenes (Celaenos), 33.
 Celibacy, of the clergy, 258 n.
 Charles, Prince (afterwards Charles V), xxvii, xxxi, 21.
 Charles VIII, king of France, xxxiii.
 Charterhouse, endowment of the, lix.
 Chelsea, More's household at, xxvi, xxviii n., lxiii, 144 n.
 Children, instruction of, 284.
 Cicero, quoted, 218 n., and often.
 Cities, Utopian, how laid out, 156.
 Citta, what, 202.
 City of the Sun, the. See Civitas Solis.

- Clement, John, xliii, lxxi; account of, 5 n.
- Clergy, celibacy of the, 285; privilege of, 286.
- Cloth, manufacture of, 139, 150.
- Coinage, tampering with the, 88 n.
- Coke, Sir Anthony, liv n.
- Colet, John, advice of, to More, xxi; a member of the Mercers' Company, xxv; preaches against the French wars, xxxi; saying of, lxiv; on codes of law, lxxxiv n.; supposed severity of, 44 n.; quoted, 62 n., 286 n., 292 n., 293 n.; Erasmus's Life of, 165 n.
- Colt, Jane, More's first wife, xxi; dies, xxiv.
- Columbus, discoveries of, xx.
- Communion service, rubric in, 292.
- Communism, how far practicable, xxxvi n., 105 n.; the Utopian, xlv, 105, 299; derived from Plato, l, 106; theoretic, lxiii; Budé's conception of, lxxxvi; objections urged against, 109; in houses, 130; Christian, 269.
- Confession, auricular, 292 n.
- Conniving at wrong, 101.
- Convicts, dress of, 68.
- Cookery, in Utopia, done by the women, 161.
- Courtiers, insincerity of, 78.
- Cowper, J. M., xxxv n.; 51 n.
- Crafts, pursued in Utopia, 141.
- Crassus, M. L., saying of, 91.
- Cremation of the dead, 277.
- Crowley, Archdeacon, on landlords, 46 n.
- Cunningham, Dr. W., 105 n., 142 n.
- Cynemerni, 289 n.
- D.
- Death, penalty of, 60; not the proper punishment for theft, 62.
- Deventer, Erasmus at school at, 280 n.
- Dibdin, Thomas, his edition of the Utopia, lxxv.
- Dice-play, prevalence of, 57; forbidden in Utopia, 144; madness of, 199; Erasmus on, ib. n.
- Dinners, the, of the Utopians, 164-6.
- Diogenes, 16.
- Dionysius the Areopagite, 293 n.
- Dioscorides, 216.
- Discourse of the Common Weal of England* (by John Hales?), 108 n., 140 n.
- Divorce, restrictions upon, 228.
- Doble, C. E., 83 n.
- Dolet, Étienne, xxiii.
- Dorp, Martin, More's Letter to, xix n., xxiii.
- Dress, want of simplicity in, 57; Utopian and English, contrasted, 140 and n.; the Utopian, 150.
- Drink, of the Utopians, 123.
- Drummond, R. B., Life of Erasmus, 247 n., 280 n.
- E.
- Earthenware, preferred to gold or silver, 175.
- Eggs, five a penny, 83; artificial hatching of, 122.
- Empson and Dudley, xxxiv, 89 n.
- Enclosures of land, xxxv; mischiefs of, 52.
- England, army of, 50; claimants to the throne of, 84; counties of, 119 n.
- Engrossing and forestalling, to be forbidden, 57.
- Epistolae obscurorum Virorum*, quoted, 51 n.
- Erasmus, More's guest, xxii; writes school-books for St. Paul's, xxv; writes the Praise of Folly, xxvi; letter of, to Froben, lxvii; to the Abbot of St. Bertin, 247 n.; his Adagia quoted, 10 n., 23 n., and often; on English church music, 296 n., 297 n.; feeling of, towards Geldenhaur and Schreiber, 320 n., 321 n.

Euripides, 216.

Euronotus (south-east wind), 85.

Eutopia, 95 n. See Utopia.

Eviction of tenants, 53.

Excommunication, 284.

F.

Fabricius, saying of, 94.

Family, rule of the, 1; Utopian 'families,' 121, 153.

Farms, in Utopia, 121.

Ferdinand, king of Spain, xxxii.

Fernando de Noronha, island of, xxxix.

Flanders, 21, 82.

Fleet, the river, 128 n.

Flesh, abstinence from, as food, 281.

Flodden, battle of, 251 n., 288 n.

Fogs, in London, 126 n.

Fools, 231.

Fourier, F. M. C., the phalansteries of, lxiii.

France, invaded by Henry VII, 45 n.; condition of, 48; standing armies in, 49; king of, 81.

Friar, story of a, 75.

Froben, Erasmus, lxxvii n., lxxix.

Froben, John, the printer, lxix; account of, lxxvii n.

Furnivall, F. J., Ballads edited by, xxxv n., xxxvi n., 52 n.

G.

Gairdner, James, 156 n., and often.

Galen, works of, 216-7.

Games, in Utopia, 144.

Gardens, made much of in Utopia, 131, 143.

Gasquet, F. A., on lands held by religious communities, 53 n.

Geldenhaur, Gerhard (in Latin, Gerardus Noviomagus), xliii, lxiv, 320.

Gerardus Listrius. See Listrius, Gerardus.

Gerardus Noviomagus. See Geldenhaur.

Germans, the, as mercenaries, 82.

Giles, Peter, of Antwerp, xlii; contributions of, to the Utopia, xliii, xcvi; Budé's opinion of, xci; letter of, to Busleyden, xcv; More's letter to, 1; account of, 1 n.; More's character of, 24.

Gold and silver, value of, factitious, 174; what vessels made of, 175; used for chains of bondmen, 176.

Goldsmiths, the first bankers, 301 n.

Gourmont, Gilles de, lxvi.

Grammar Schools, too many in Bacon's time, lix.

Grapheus, Cornelius. See Schreiber.

Graunger, Agnes, mother of Sir Thomas More, xvii.

Gray's Inn, Cecil (Lord Burghley), a student at, 15 n.

Greek, study of, xix, 212; soon learnt by the Utopians, 213; list of Greek authors, 216.

Grocyn, William, xix.

Gulike, country of, xxxvii, 28; origin of name, 28 n.

H.

Hagnopolis, lxxxix.

Hall, Bishop, his Mundus alter et idem, liv; account of the work, lv.

Halls, common, in Utopia, 143, 159.

Happiness, in what consisting, 187.

- Harrison, W., Description of England, 133 n., 262 n.
 Hartfelder, Dr. Karl, description of St. Paul's School, xxv n.
 Health, bodily, a pleasure, 204.
 Henry VII, avarice of, 89 n.; fortune left by, 96 n.
 Henry VIII, accession of, xxiv; expeditions of, xxxi; matters in debate with Prince Charles, 21.
 Herodian, 216.
 Herodotus, 216.
 Hesychius, 216.
 Hippocrates, 216.
 Hiring, of labourers, 67.
 Holbein, Hans, drawing of More's family, 163 n.
 Holt, John, author of Lac Puerorum, xviii n.
 Holt, Nicholas, More's schoolmaster, xviii.
 Holy days, in Utopia, 289.
 Homer, 216.
 Hook, Dean, his conception of the Utopia, xli n.
 Horawitz, Dr. Adalbert, 320 n.
 Horses, limited use of, in Utopia, 123.
 Hospitals, in Utopia, 159; in London, 160 n.
 Hounds, folly of keeping, 199.
 Hours, of rising, or of work, xlv, 4 n.; in Utopia, 145.
 Houses, construction of, in Utopia, 130; in England, 132 n.; care or neglect of, 149.
 Hunting, dispraised, 200.
 Husbands, power of, 230.
 Hythloday, Raphael, More's spokesman, xxxvii, 307; origin of the name, 26 n.; More's introduction to, xlii, 25; nephew of, xciii; subsequent history of, xcix; fourth voyage of, 215; and his companions, 269.
- I.
- Improvements, slowness to admit, 113 n.
 Incense, symbolic meaning of, 293 n.
 Incubation, artificial, 122.
 Infants, nursing of, 162.
 Infectious diseases, precautions against, 159.
 Intentions, second, 185.
Intercursus magnus, the, xx.
 Isabella, of Castile, xxxii.
 Italy, designs of the French king upon, 81 n.
- J.
- James IV, king of Scotland, xxxiii.
 Jessopp, Dr., article on Cecil, Lord Burghley, 15 n.
 Judges, pressure put upon, 90; preferred by More to juries, 235 n.
 Julius II, Pope, xxxii, lxxxi n., 288 n.
 Juries, causes of corruption of, 235 n.
- K.
- Katharine, of Aragon, betrothal of, xxxiii.
 King, duty of a good, 95.
 Kings, courts of, 38; More's way of improving, 100; as observers of treaties, 239; intrigues of, 251 n.
- L.
- Labour, change in the conditions of, lxii; forced, 67; hours of, fixed by law, 142 n.; exemption from, rare in Utopia, 147.
 Labourers, hardships of, 301.
 Lactantius, quoted, 266 n.
 Land, enclosures of, in More's time, xxxv; legislation for, 108.
 Lascaris, 215.

- Latimer, Bishop, quoted, 107 n., 108 n.
- Latin, not the language of philosophy, 27.
- Law, codes of, Budé's invectives against, lxxxiii.
- Laws, raking up of obsolete, 89, 95; ever being made afresh, 105; few and simple in Utopia, 234.
- Leagues, none made in Utopia, 241. See also Treaties.
- Lectures, early morning, in Utopia, 143.
- Lee, Sidney, xxviii n., lxxi n., 274 n.
- Lestrygonés, 33.
- Lever, Thomas, sermon by, xxxvi.
- Lilly, W. S., 274 n.
- Lily, Agnes, xxi n.
- Lily, William, More's fellow-student, xx, xciii n., 44 n.; lines of, quoted, 214.
- Linacre, Thomas, xix, lxxxi, xci, 160 n.; account of, lxxxii n.
- Lincoln's Inn, More's connexion with, xvii, xviii, xx; customs at, xlv.
- Listrius, Gerardus, 185 n., 320 n.
- Loadstone, the, 32.
- Loans, 172.
- Logicals, 'the small,' 185.
- London, reminiscences of, in Am-aurote, 126 n.; Bridge, the old, 128 n.; vineyards in, 131 n.
- Longland, Bishop, quoted, 156 n.
- Loss and gain, 109.
- Louis XII, king of France, xxxiv.
- Louvain, the Collegium Trilingue at, xcvi n.
- Lucan, quoted by More, 28.
- Lucian, Dialogues of, translated by More, xxii; quoted, 15 n., 107 n.; fondness of the Utopians for, 216.
- Lumby, Professor J. R., x, lxxv, 320 n.
- Lupset, Thomas, xxxv, lxxviii; Budé's letter to, lxxx; account of, lxxx n., 5 n.
- Luther, Table-talk, 282 n.
- Lying, detested by the Utopians, 275.
- Lynemernes, 289.
- M.
- Macariens, the, 95.
- Machiavelli, quoted, xxxii.
- Mackintosh, Sir James, quoted, xln., xli.
- Magistrates, in Utopia, 135, 233, 236.
- Major, R. H., Life of Prince Henry, xl.
- Margaret, Princess, sister of Henry VIII, xxxiii.
- Markets in Utopia, 156-7.
- Marriages, royal, xxxiii, 83 n.; age for, in Utopia, 224.
- Martin, Thierry, the printer, lxiv.
- Martyrs, Christian, 268.
- Mary, Princess, sister of Henry VIII, xxxiv.
- Matrimony, when dissolved, 227.
- Maundeville, Sir John, 33 n.; quoted, 122 n.
- Maximilian, the Emperor, xxxiii; serving in the English army at Tournay, 82 n.
- Mayor, John E. B., Professor, 25 n., 27 n.
- Meals, hours for, 142.
- Meat, eating of, 281.
- Mechlin, Busleyden's house at, 319.
- Medicine, professors of, 217.
- Mendicants, 74.
- Mentiranus, what, 169 n.
- Mercenaries, use of, in war, 252.
- Meteorology, anticipations of, lvii, 186.
- Metheglin, 124 n.

- Milan, designs of France against, 81 n.
- Milk Street, xvii.
- Miracles, true and false, 279.
- Mithra (see also Mythra), 291.
- Money, raising the value of, 88 ; inveighed against, 305.
- Month*, the, quoted, xxxvi n.
- Moors, expulsion of the, from Spain, xx.
- More, John (judge), xvii ; fined by Henry VII, xxii.
- MORE, SIR THOMAS, early life of, xvii ; statue of, xviii n., 233 n. ; in Morton's household, xix ; at Oxford, ib. ; University studies of, ib. ; at New Inn and Lincoln's Inn, xx ; lectures on St. Augustine, ib., xlii ; called to the bar, xxi ; inclined to the priesthood, ib. ; marries, ib. ; home in Bucklersbury, ib. ; called to parliament, xxii ; visits the Continent, ib., lxviii n. ; translates Lucian, xxii ; inveighs against prevalent superstition, xxiii ; left a widower, xxiv ; second marriage of, ib. ; Under Sheriff, xxiv n. ; made a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, xxv ; translates Richard III, ib. ; made a Mercer, xxv ; resides at Crosby Place, xxvi ; sent on an embassy into Flanders, ib., xxix, 21 ; tries to allay the riot of 1517, xxvii ; sworn of the Privy Council, xxviii ; refutes the Oath of Supremacy, ib. ; executed, ib. ; his home at Chelsea, ib. n. ; his house, ib. n. ; reluctant to enter the Court, xxxi, 35 n. ; epigrams of, quoted, xxxii n., xxxiv, 50 n., 92 n., 96 n., 186 n., 233 n., 319 n. ; irony of, xli ; letter of, to Peter Giles, 1 ; his many occupations, 3 ; Latinity of, 17 n. ; habit of wearing his gown awry, 25 n. ; extemporizing parts for himself, 99 n. ; an eques auratus, 176 n. ; fond of astronomy, but a despiser of astrology, 186 ; early verses of, 199 n. ; his office as a narrator, 211 ; his fondness for Greek, 212 ; his pet monkey, 215 ; his fool, 231 ; his views of religious toleration, 271 n., 272 n. ; charge of cruelty against, 273 n. ; Busleyden's praise of, 314.
- Moricae (More's daughters), liv, lxiv.
- Morris, William, lxiii, lxxv, 121 n.
- Morton, Cardinal, has More in his household, xix ; sends him to Oxford, ib. ; Lord Campbell's opinion of, ib. n. ; Lord Chancellor, 41 ; More's character of, ib. ; account of 41 n. ; habit of, 59 n. ; tries to calm angry disputants, 76.
- Mountjoy, Lord, 264 n.
- Mulleeters, proverb about, 86.
- Mullinger, J. Bass, xcvi n., 185 n., 215 n.
- Mundus alter et idem*, the, liv.
- Music, More's fondness for, xxiv, 166 n. ; strictures on church music, 295 n., 296 n.
- Myddelton, Alice, xxiv.
- Mythra, 267.
- N.
- Naples, claims of the French Kings to, 81 n.
- Navarre, kingdom of, 83.
- Nepheletes, the, 244.
- New Atlantis*, the, lx.
- New Inn, More at, xx.
- Nobles, the English, seeking revenues from their lands, 197.
- Nova Atlantis*. See New Atlantis.
- Noviomagus, Gerardus. See Geldenhour.

- Nunquamia, Nusquamia, translations of name Utopia, xl.
- Nurses, the, in Utopia, 162.
- O.
- Old age, provision for, 302.
- Owen, Robert, lxiii.
- Oxen, preferred to horses for ploughing, 123.
- P.
- Pace, Richard, his De Fructu, 44 n., 243 n., 253 n., 296 n.
- Painting, of the face, 232.
- Paley, quoted, 225 n.
- Paludanus, Ioannes (Van der Broek), lxvi n., lxx n.
- Parliament, the Utopian, 137, 169-70.
- Pattinson, Henry, 231 n.
- Penal servitude, forms of, 64, 66.
- Perfumes, fondness of the Utopians for, 166.
- Persia, custom in, 64; language of, like the old Utopian, 135 n., 148, 214, 267 n., 291 n.
- Philarches, 124. See Phylarchs.
- Phillips, Rowland, Vicar of Croydon, 7 n.
- Philomorus*, quoted, 292.
- Philosophy, treasures of, in Greek, not Latin, 27; speculative, 97; political, 98; ethical, 187; Epicurean, xxxviii, 188.
- Phylarch, what, xlv, 121, 124, 135.
- Physicians, foundation of the College of, 160 n.
- Pico, Giovanni (Count), More's translation from, xxiv.
- Pio, Alberti, Count of Carpi, 212 n.
- Plague, ravages of the, 156.
- Plato, More's indebtedness to, li; quoted, 79, 123 n., 130 n., 144 n., 294 n., 316 n.; and Dionysius, 80; his commonwealth, 101; similitude of, 104; required communism, 106; works of, 215.
- Plautus, 98; More's Latin style tintured by, 18 n., 102 n.
- Pleasure, the summum bonum, 188; in what consisting, 194; counterfeited, 195; bodily, 203, 209; mental, 206.
- Plutarch, 216.
- Pole, afterwards Cardinal, xxxv, xxxvi; made the exponent of Starkey's views on relieving the poor, 43 n., on punishment of crime, 64 n.
- Polyerites, the, l, 65.
- Popes, as observers of treaties, 238-9.
- Population, provision for surplus, 154.
- Prayers, Utopian, 297.
- Precious metals, value attached to, in Utopia, 175; precious stones, 176, 180, 197; folly of seeking pleasure in, 198.
- Prelates, martial, 288 n.
- Prescott, W. H., Ferdinand and Isabella, quoted, 81 n., and often.
- Pride, More's detestation of, 306.
- Priests, the Utopian, 282; instructors of the young, 284; may be women, 285; peacemakers, 288; dress of, 294.
- Prince, the, in Utopia, what, xlv n., 136, 148.
- Printing, the art of, taught, 219.
- Proctors, 234.
- Property, private, 104, 106.
- Punishment, object of, 69; experiments in, 71-2; for theft, severity of, 43; capital, when inflicted in Utopia, 230.
- R.
- Readers, difficulty of pleasing all, 10.

- Reading aloud at dinner and supper, 165.
- Religions, diversity of, in Utopia, 266.
- 'Religious,' number of the, 145.
- Republic*, the, of Plato, compared with the Utopia, li; analysis of, lii.
- Retainers, number of, 46, 146.
- Rhenanus, Beatus, lxi n., lxxvii n., lxxvii n.
- Riches and poverty, Latimer on, 107 n.
- Rich men, charge against, 303.
- Rigg, J. M., xxiv n.
- Rivers, pollution of, 158 n.
- Robinson, Richard, lxxiii n.
- Robynson, Ralph, account of, lxxi; his style, lxxii; title-page of the first edition of his translation, 13; dedication of his work to Cecil, 15; his character of More, 17.
- Rogers, Professor J. E. Thorold, quoted, 50 n.; 140 n.
- Romans, their form of penal servitude, 64.
- Rome, capture and sack of, xlix n.
- Roper, William, Life of More, 272 n., and often.
- Ruelle, Jehan, friend of Budé, xcii.
- Rule, a leaden, 102.
- Ruthall, Thomas, Bishop of Durham, xxii n.
- S.
- Sacraments, of the Church, craved by the Utopians, 270.
- Salerno, precepts of the school of, 207 n.
- Sallust, quoted, 42.
- Scaliger, Joseph, xl n.
- Schreiber, Cornelius, verses of, 321.
- Schoolmasters, bad, 44.
- Science, physical, 217.
- Scots, the, ready to invade England, 83.
- Scott, Sir Walter, quoted, 15 n., 47 n.
- Scyllas, 33.
- Seebohm, F., xix n., and often.
- Selfishness, 193.
- Seneca, quoted, 98.
- Sexes, separation of, in church, 292.
- Shakspeare, seeming imitation of Erasmus by, 23 n.
- Sheep, increased rearing of, 51, 54 n.; murrain among, 55.
- Shene, Carthusians of, 281 n.
- Shepherd, the true office of the, 93.
- Ships, kinds of, met with by Hythloday, 31.
- Sibbes, Dr. Richard, quoted, 102 n.
- Sick, provision for the, 159, 222; how treated when incurable, 223.
- Simpson, Dr. W. Sparrow, 86 n., 294 n.
- Siphogrants. See Syphogrants.
- Siriens (Syrians), the, 49.
- Skelton, John, xciii n.
- Slaughtering of cattle, left to slaves, 158.
- Slaves. See Bondmen.
- Sleep, More's time for, 4 n.; hours of, in Utopia, 142.
- Smoke, consumption of, 158 n.
- Socialist theories, lxiii.
- Soldiers, in time of peace, 48.
- Soothsaying, despised by the Utopians, 279.
- Sophocles, 216.
- Soul, immortality of the, held by the Utopians, 188.
- Spartans, institutions of the, liii.
- Spirits of the departed, 278.
- St. Anthony's school, xviii.
- St. John, J. A., quoted, 218 n., and often.
- St. Paul's school, xxv.
- Stapleton, Thomas, quoted, xix n., 4 n., and often.

Starkey, Thomas, on enclosures, xxxv : on pauperism, 43 n.
 Statues, of great men, to be set up, 233.
 Statute of labourers, 142 n.
 Stealing, repression of, 44 ; causes of, 54, 56.
 Strand, state of the, in More's time, xxx n.
 Streets, width of, xxx, 130 n. ; paving of, 113 n.
 Stubbs, Bishop, xxi n., and often.
 Subsidies, demanded, 89 n.
 Suicide, when allowed in Utopia, 223.
 Superstition, More on, xxiii.
 Suppers, the, of the Utopians, 166.
 Sutton, Thomas, endowment of, lix.
 Swimming, taught in Utopia, 262.
 Swiss, the, as mercenaries, 82, 252 n., 253 n. ; More's dislike of them, 255.
 Syphogrants, what, xlv, 135 ; origin of the name, 135 n. ; their office, 141, 147 ; residence, 159 ; wards, 161, 164 ; wives, 162, 164 ; grant leave to travel, 167.

T.

Tables, the common, of the Utopians, 161-4.
 Tadlow, George, 18.
 Taprobane (Ceylon), 29.
 Taylor, Emily, 274 n.
 Temsice, George, 23 and n.
 Terence, quoted, 102.
 Thames, the, signified by the Anyder, 127 n.
 Theophrastus, 215.
 Thieves, first made, then punished, 58.
 Thucydides, 216.
 Ticket of leave, anticipation of, li, 71 n., 231.
 Toleration, religious, 271.

Toys, children's, 177.

Tranibore, what, xlv, 135 ; origin of name, ib. n. ; grant leave to travel, 167.

Trapemernes, 289.

Treaties, breach of, xxxii, 238.

Tricius Apinatus, 216.

Tunstall, Cuthbert, xxvii ; xlii n. ; account of, 22 n. ; godfather to Peter Giles's infant child, ib.

U.

UTOPIA, island of, where situated, xl, lxxxix, 7 ; name of, not grammatically formed, xl n. ; how varied, xl ; originally a peninsula, xliii ; states of, xlv, 119 ; government of, not a monarchy, xlv n., 136 ; religions in, liii ; woodcut of, lxxv (facsimile facing p. 115) ; description of, 115 ; alphabet of, lxxv (facsimile facing p. xciv) ; verses on, xciii, xciv ; missions to, 8 ; shipwreck on coast of, 112 ; anciently called Abraxa, 118 ; antiquity of, 132 ; language of, 135, 148, 184, 214 ; climate and soil of, 211.

UTOPIA, the, Second Book of, composed first, xxvii, xli, xliii ; suggested by Vespucci's discoveries, xl ; First Book, when written, xliii ; artistic touches in, ib. ; suggestions borrowed from Plutarch, xlv, 167 n. ; interest of, lxiii ; early editions of, lxiv-lxxi ; English translations of, lxxiii-lxxvi ; French translation of, 27 n. ; title-page of edition of 1518 (facsimile facing p. lxxvi) ; contributions of Peter Giles to, xcvi ; expurgated edition of, 73 n.

Utopians, less pleasant traits in their character, xlvii, 117 (comp. 248-251) ; dress of the, 140, 150 ; mode of dining, 161-2; exports of the, 170; imports, 171, 220; their fondness for learning, 183; love of natural science, 186; Epicureans, 188; character of, 212; their quickness in learning, 213, 219; are all lawyers, 235; supply their neighbours with magistrates, 236; their soldiers volunteers, 256; arms and armour of, 261; their religion, 266; sects among, 281; their priests, 282; holy days, 289; churches, ib.; public worship, 292.

Utopus, King, xl; date of, xliii; improvements made by, xlv, xlviii, 118, 131; his ordinance for religious liberty, 271.

V.

Vagabondage, in England, xxxv.

Valla, Laurentius, lxxxi n.

Vander Haeghen, M., xxii n.

Varnhagen, M. F. A. de, account of Vespucci, xxxix n.

Vasco de Gama, 29 n.

Vele, Abraham, lxxiii.

Venice, partition of, 81 n.

Vergil, Polydore, 296 n.

Vespucci, Amerigo, Voyages of, xxxvii, 27; Mundus novus of, xxxviii; manners of peoples discovered by him, ib.; fourth voyage of, xxxix.

Vesputius. See Vespucci.

Vineyards, in London, 131 n.

Virtue, the stoical definition of, 190 n., 192.

Volaterranus, Raphael, 27 n.

Volunteer soldiers, 256.

W.

Wakefield, Gilbert, on sport, 201 n.

War, detested by the Utopians, xlv, 243; by More, liii; when allowed to be just, 155, 243; cost of, how defrayed, 264.

Warbeck, Perkin, 84 n.

Warner, Dr. F., lxxvi.

Watney, John, xxv n., 126 n.

Wedlock. See Marriages and Matrimony.

Wesley, John, 276 n.

White, Rev. Edward, 276 n.

Wife, importance of the, in Utopia, 168.

Windows, glazing of, 133.

Wives, community of, 225 n.; chastised by their husbands, 230.

Wolsey, tries to draw More into the King's service, 35 n.

Women, education of, liii; admitted in Utopia to the priesthood, 285; to the army, 257; naturally devout, 285 n.

Woods, transplanted, 212.

Wool, English, xxvi, 51 n.; price of, risen, 54; fine or coarse, 181, 196.

Work, hours of, in Utopia, xlv, 141-2, 145; how to be made pleasurable, 110 n.; modern ideas of, 145 n.; not to be omitted in travel, 168.

Y.

Ypres, provision for the poor at, 43 n.

Z.

Zapoletcs, the, xlvii, 252.

Oxford

PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

BY HORACE HART, PRINTER TO THE UNIVERSITY

1870
1871
1872
1873
1874
1875
1876
1877
1878
1879
1880

1881
1882
1883
1884
1885
1886
1887
1888
1889
1890
1891

More, Thomas
Utopia
(Lupton ed.)

PR
2321
.U6L8

